Family Art Workshop

Janis Yerington is bringing her years of experience as an artist and art educator to the community by giving a lively art workshop for kids and adults. She has chosen to present the workshop in the Photography Gallery of the the Bolinas Museum where Julie Garner's amazing tapestry-woven photographs will help inspire the participants. Each person will leave with their own finished art work, matted and ready for an 8"x10" frame.

Janis, her husband, and their three children moved to Bolinas for the community spirit we all share. Her background is Brandeis University and studies in Florence, Italy and Cambridge University, England. She has worked for museums, galleries, the New Yorker Magazine and taught art and literature in schools.

Cost of the workshop is $20 per person, but free to adults who are accompanying children under 7 years old. Janis will provide all the materials including oil pastels and art mats.

Workshop is 10-11:30 AM. Meet in the Bolinas Museum courtyard. Please make reservations: 868-0330 or emailvandy@bolinasmuseum.org.

Can you spell THAT without any P's?

I'd love to see some Bolinas ears (faces too!) when my trio plays at the Panama Hotel in San Rafael this next Wednesday, March 7.

My clarinet will be joined with the endlessly inventive Si Perkoff on keyboard and the virtuoso bass of Piro Patton.

The Panama is a delightful place located in a classy old hotel, and it has excellent food. #4 Bayview St

We play from 7 p.m. to 10. From downtown San Rafael, go south on "B" a few blocks to corner of Bayview. Reservations advised, 457-3993.

Sue Briner (remembered)

from a letter by Carl Jung, 1957

"You may get habituated to noise as to overindulgence in alcohol, but just as you pay for this with cirrhosis of the liver, so in the end you pay for nervous stress with a premature depletion of our vital substance. The nervous exhaustion caused by the tempo of modern civilization leads to addiction and this to an even poorer performance and premature wastage of the vital substance."

Noise is certainly only one of the evils of our time, though perhaps the most obtrusive. This is the degenerate symptom of urban civilization -the nerve shattering din of our technological gadgetry has led to a widespread, though not generally conscious fear, which loves noise because it stops the fear from being heard. Noise is welcome because it drowns the inner instinctive warning. Fear seeks noisy company and pandemonium to scare away the demons. Noise like crowds gives a feeling of security; therefore people love it and avoid doing anything about it as they instinctively feel the apotrophic magic it sends us. Noise protects us from painful reflection. It scatters our anxious dreams. It assures us that we are all in the same boat and creating such a racket that nobody will dare to attack us

The dark side of the picture is that we wouldn't have noise if we didn't secretly want it. It is an un-admitted and un-comprehended means to an end, compensation of the fear, which is only too well founded. If there were silence their fear would make people reflect, and there's no knowing what might then come to consciousness. Most people are afraid of silence

The need for noise is almost insatiable, even though it becomes unbearable at times. The real fear is what might come up from one's depths, all the things that have been held at bay by noise. You have taken on a difficult task with this much needed noise abatement, for the more you attack noise, the closer you come to the taboo territory of silence, which is so much dreaded. You will be depriving all those nobodies whom nobody ever listens to of their sole joy in life and of incomparable satisfaction they feel when they shatter the stillness of the night with their clattering motorbikes, disturbing everyone's sleep with their hellish din. At that moment they amount to something. Noise is their reason for being and a confirmation of their existence. Noise is an integral component of modern civilization, which is predominantly extroverted and abhors all inwardness. It is an evil with deep roots. It all goes together with the spiritual disorientation of our time. Real improvement can be hoped for only if there is a radical change of consciousness, all other measures will remain unreliable since they do not penetrate to the depths where the evil is rooted and constantly renewed.

Another easily overlooked weapon is the destruction of the ability to concentrate, the prime requisite for operation of our highly complex machines and equipments. The life of the masses is inconceivable without them and yet it is constantly threatened by superficiality, inattention and slovenliness submitted by Stephen Simac, who feels comforted now that he's driving a noisy truck, while worrying about the premature wastage of the vital substance.

Grass!

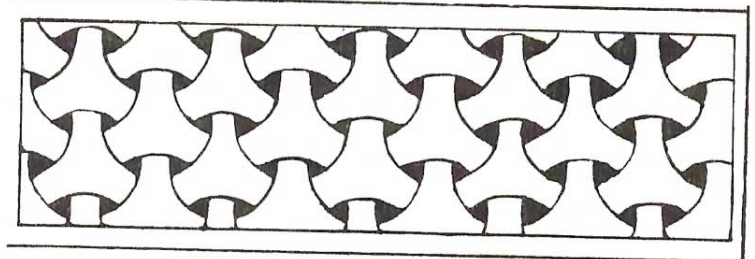

Ashley Ratcliff is passionate about grass. She points out that grasses support life on the planet, from wheat, rice and other grains to countless uses for bamboo, feed for grazing animals and home to thousands of life forms. Ashley teaches grass taxonomy--identifying grasses--to biologists and anyone interested. Her knowledge and love for this subject brings us a fresh awareness of what we see so commonly, yet hardly realize the fascinating complexity and diversity of their forms.

Ashley Ratcliff will be interviewed on Elia Haworth's radio show Original Minds KWMR radio 89.9 in Bolinas/Stinson Saturday March 3, 9AM.
