If the power goes off, the show goes on!

The band will play acoustically. We shall not expend all our energies in trying to set up a noisy generator. It will be a wonderful evening, electrical power or no. Please come, bringing all the available battery powered lighting that you may have, plus flickering led candles in glasses or globes. Solar charged yard lights would be excellent if you have some. Remember this is to benefit our downtown book exchange which we all love and want to support.

A reminder if you haven’t already been informed:

A jazz quintet playing ultra-cool pieces from the iconic Blue Note record label.
Si Perkoff piano
Michael Pinkham drums
Piro Patton bass
Cayce Carnahan trumpet
Michael Bello tenor sax

First set: deep meditative compositions from Coltrane, Monk, Herbie Hancock, Wayne Shorter.

Second set: hot up-tempo dance numbers.

Greetings Bolinas and Stinson Beach residents,
As you are likely aware, the power is scheduled to be turned off In most of Marin County starting at some point in the afternoon on Saturday, 10/26.

We just want to make you aware that KWMR may experience equipment issues that preclude us from broadcasting on 89.9 FM during this outage. Equipment issues may also preclude KWMR from streaming, which would also affect the use of the APP.

If you are in an area where 90.5 or 92.3 can be heard, these frequencies should work.

Day of the Dead celebration Saturday October 26th

The 31st annual West Marin Day of the Dead happens this Saturday Oct 26th in Point Reyes. This free, multicultural, multigenerational event, open to the public, includes face painting (2 to 4 pm at Ernesto’s Studio) a Day of the Dead procession through town starting at 5pm (meeting in front of Gallery Route One). The procession heads to the community altar at Toby’s where there is a heartfelt ceremony honoring loved ones past. People are encouraged to bring photos or mementos to place on the community altar. Pozole will be served to all attendees.

Celebración del Día de los Muertos Sábado el 26 de octubre

El trigésimo primer anual Día de los Muertos West Marin ocurre este sábado el 26 de octubre en point reyes. Este evento gratis, multicultural, multigeneracional, abierto al público, incluye pintacaras (desde las 2 de la tarde hasta las 5 en el taller de Ernesto), una calenda de Muertos qué comienza a las 5 y atraviesa el pueblo (reunir en frente de Gallery Route One). La calenda se culmina en el altar comunitario en Toby’s dónde hay ceremonia del corazón para honrar nuestros queridos que han pasado al otro lado. Se anima a los que asisten que traigan fotos y recuerdos para poner en el altar. Se sirve pozole a toda la comunidad.

Local Bolinas Family
of 5 needs a home ASAP

My husband and I both work locally. I work at the Bolinas Children’s Center and John is a local contractor. Two of our daughters attend Tam High and our youngest is a 2nd grader at the Bolinas School. We need to move by November 30th. We have excellent local work and rental references. We are looking for an affordable and long-term lease in Bo. Any leads would be very much appreciated.

Many Thanks,
Nicole, John, Tahlia, Ava and Ondine

Bolinas Community Plan Reading Group

Mondays in November at 8pm (BCLT office – 22 Brighton Ave)

The Bolinas Community Plan is our rule book, our Bible, right? But when did you read through it last? When have you discussed it with a group? Here’s our chance! We will have 4 separate discussion meetings to go through the plan in four sections and get into the weeds about its language, purpose, where it’s been successful and where it might be outdated with the current state of our community. We are asking for people of all ages and backgrounds to participate in this. Let’s explore our community’s past and understand how it effects our present and our future.

What are you reading now? What's in your pile of books? Do you read one book at a time or several?

I try to have several books on hand, although usually one dominates my time, especially if it's a page-turner. I'm currently reading Don Winslow's The Cartel trilogy and have just finished a book everyone should read, by Tom Phillips, entitled Humans: A Brief History of How We Fucked It All Up—which shows in an entertaining way that humans today are not unique in their stupidity, short-sightedness, and sheer denial about the present and future. Rather, we’re just the latest crop of delusional idiots that have somehow continued to survive :) Other books in the pile are Philip Pullman's The Secret Commonwealth (book 2 in the Book of Dust trilogy), and Prisoners of Geography by Tim Marshall, and who knows what else will come along.

Do you like to read paper or ebooks? Audio books?

I do so much 'computer reading' for my professional life that I only read 'real books' when not working.

How do you find the books you want to read?

Mostly by recommendations from friends and people I meet on my travels. It's particularly nice to find good character development in a long series that can take months to read and obviate the need to wonder what next to find. Sometimes, though, I run out of reading matter and am stuck without ideas, but a browse of recent titles in the library usually produces something to feed the addiction.

Do you have a favorite genre? Any genres that you never read?

I read almost anything, assuming it is well written. But I read so much science and the like for work that for escape I read mainly fiction, either quick-and-dirty 'plane reading' on travel days or more 'serious' books that take a few days, or even weeks. Hence, historical fiction, some fantasy fiction (such as The Wheel of Time series, by Robert Jordan), and crime thrillers (among which Ian Rankin's Inspector Rebus series and Michael Connelly's Detective Harry Bosch series are stand-outs). I haven't read any autobiographies or books on current events and politics and doubt that I will. I also enjoy non-fiction, mainly popular science and discourses on broader topics, such as the brilliant writings on various forms of cognition by Oliver Sacks (his Seeing Voices is a classic) and 'light reading' such as The Meaning of Human Existence, by E. O. Wilson.
What was your reading experience as a child? Did you grow up with a lot of books? A favorite book?

My father was a Fleet Street journalist before he lost faith in the objectivity of the media and moved on to other things, and both of my parents were addicted to reading. Thus the family house was packed full of books and as a child I devoured books (many from the village library, but I also had my own bookshelves). I have no recollection of any favorites beyond classics like The Hobbit, which I do remember soon became too scary for me the first time I tried reading it!

Were there any books that made a big impression on you in your life?

One Hundred Years of Solitude (Gabriel García Márquez) and Finnegans Wake (James Joyce) were notable for revealing different ways of writing beyond all that 'correct stuff' one is taught in High School. After years of backpack traveling in Latin America I read Peter Matthiessen's At Play in the Fields of the Lord, which I really related to. Peter was also a birder, and I guided him on one of his book-signing visits to Marin County and learned that the inspiration for that book came from travels like mine—first-hand experience, especially at an impressionable age, stamps authenticity on writing.

Is there a famous author that you ever wanted to meet? Maybe back in time?

Perhaps Charles Dickens, whose ability to create credible characters and plots greatly helped bring the joy of reading to many 'ordinary' people rather than the reading of books being something for the elite.

What's the last great book that you read and recommended to a friend?

A couple of 'books' come to mind: The Clifton Chronicles (all seven of them!) by Jeffrey Archer, and The Century Trilogy by Ken Follett. Both authors are storytelling masters, in the tradition of Dickens, whose real-life heroes, villains, and interwoven plots make you laugh out loud and cry.

What do you plan to read next? Do you plan?

On request at the Bolinas library is Subliminal: Subliminal: How your subconscious mind rules your behavior by Leonard Mlodinow, and I'm always hoping for good recommendations.

Is there a book that you always meant to read but still haven't? Any highly rated books that you thought were over rated?

Nothing comes to mind for books I've meant to read, although a few years ago I did finally get around to reading Moby Dick—it was a hard slog with so much archaic English, but fascinating to see how the language has evolved since then. There are several authors or books I think are over rated, but that's all a matter of taste, like good wines being wines you like rather than what 'experts' tell you is good or bad. Some authors seemingly like to write solely to show how erudite they are, over-adjectivizing every expletive-deleted sentence and never having metaphor they didn't like. Others pump out tens of formulaic books that aren't 'bad' per se but lack depth. Millions of readers seem to like both extremes but neither does much for me.

What books do you return to? Are there any books you like to re-read?

One of the great things about getting older is that memory doesn't improve with age, which allows one to derive pleasure from re-reading great books from years ago. For the most part, though, I find new books to read, although for a time every few years I used to re-read The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, by Douglas Adams—maybe it's time to dig it out again.

Do you have a collection of books at home?

I have too many work-related bird books, which leave little room for anything else, although one bookcase is devoted to non-work books, some of which I may re-read someday, or which are great to pass on to friends.
What kind of characters draw you in as a reader?

I’m not sure that characters draw me in as much as stories and styles of writing, although obviously these are often linked. As a writer of non-fiction, much of which could be defensibly defined as ‘boring’ or at least specialized and semi-technical, I’m always curious to see how some writers can draw you in eazily to a book, often within the first page or two (such as Lee Child), whereas others can’t do it after a few chapters.

When and where do you like to read? Describe your ideal reading experience.

I’ll read anywhere and anytime, but ideally a quiet place, a glass of good tequila, a piece of dark chocolate, and somewhere comfortable to sit make the ideal setting.

Why Read?

Why breathe? A life without reading would surely be no life at all, be it reading for education, information, or an all-too-increasingly-needed escape from the world we live in. Words and written language are arguably the greatest invention of the human species, yet we take them for granted. But think about it: How do a bunch of codified lines and scrawls on a piece of paper (or on a computer screen) have the ability to convey so much information, to fire our imaginations, to stir our minds and our souls, to help us escape or ensnare us, to delight or scare us—it’s a miracle.

Today I went to the post office and on the wall was a desperate appeal for a place to live from a long-time Bolinas father and son. When I sat down at my computer, I saw another plea for housing a family of 5 who will soon lose their rental. They have children in the school district, work locally and all of these people are solid members of our community. Then I heard that a house currently for sale might be purchased and turned into yet another short-term vacation rental. I’m upset. The housing situation is alarming and every time I turn around, the town is losing another full-time resident family or individual. Young people trying to make it definitely cannot afford to live here.

I joined the board of the Bolinas Community Land Trust three years ago because I love Bolinas and the diversity of our little town. I began to see so many long-time local people lose their housing, forcing them to move out of town. I owned the hardware store and knew that my employees invariably struggled finding places to live – an ongoing problem for all our local businesses and their workers. Local businesses cannot survive without regular customers and the weekend surfer and vacationer community is not enough to sustain those businesses. I was concerned that Bolinas could easily turn into a resort town with fewer and fewer full-time residents. I also didn’t want to see our school and fire department have to leave town as well.

The BCLT is committed to creating enough housing to keep our community and school stable. We are excited to be working on some real solutions including buying existing properties, building conservative new homes, working with legacy housing gifts and creating opportunities for people to convert or create conforming second units with our new septic program.

We have been actively fundraising for several years and have been able to purchase one water meter, a "red-tagged" property with a water meter, and one parcel of land. We were gifted property on Overlook and an anonymous donor has also helped us to purchase 20 acres on the Tacherra ranch and an empty lot downtown that once belonged to the Bagley family, located across from the Bolinas Market. We have plans and drawings of most of these projects in our downtown office and invite everyone to visit, ask questions and learn about what we are doing.

These different projects will be staggered over a period of five years minimum, which should lessen the impact for everyone. We plan to mitigate any clear for building purposes by establishing native plantings and landscaping. I actually live around the corner from one of the potential building sites and although I like the open, empty lot, I think it's more important to have a place for a community member to live, without having to worry constantly about being kicked out for a short-term rental or sale.

We are working within the "Bolinas Plan" and the water moratorium, plus strictly adhering to state and local building laws. The BCLT is also working closely with the Bolinas Public Utility District (BPUD) regarding water usage. We have spent an enormous amount of time on the studies that must be conducted and on permits, plan reviews, revisions and compliance issues in order to fulfill the requirements of the County of Marin and BPUD.

My husband's family has owned property and either lived or vacationed in Bolinas for over 100 years. The town has changed a great deal during that time. He remembers when the Big Mesa had only a sparse few houses and the rest was primarily grass with no coastal scrub and few trees. The town was filled with mostly agricultural families, business owners and vacationers. He recalls seeing a horse-drawn plow on the gospel flat fields and there were only a few houses on Horseshoe hill and one small dwelling in Paradise Valley. The San Francisco Bulletin’s lot give-away and later, the 1970's oil spill brought many newcomers and building to Bolinas and we all survived. The point is that change is constant and we don’t need to fear it. However, there is one thing that has remained unchanged in Bolinas during its existence and that is a community of families at its core. Until now.

We are so fortunate to live on the edge of the Point Reyes National Seashore, the Golden Gate National Recreation Area and the Marin Municipal Water District. Nature abounds and we’re only asking for a few small projects that will fold right into the local landscape after a few years. The town is still a wonderful place to live, full of diversity with its artists, farmers, fishermen, local businesses, nature lovers and people of all ages and income levels. We have the opportunity to save our town by stabilizing the community and stopping the flow of families and friends being forced to leave town as they lose their housing. Only hard work and hard decisions will preserve our unique community from becoming a resort town with few full-time residents.

Happy fall dear Bolinas! I have taken over Thanksgiving for Ilika, who will be on Alcatraz celebrating 50 years of the occupation. As always, the Bolinas Market and the Hardware store are accepting cash donations but this year, you can also Venmo me at @Jacqueline-Patterson-14 or CashApp me at $MedicalMaryjane Be sure to put Bolinas Thanksgiving in the memo. Donations will be used to purchase turkeys and trimmings as well as candles to make the tables festive. You can also volunteer to cook turkeys (we need about 7 volunteers), help in the kitchen the day of, and/or help with clean up. I can be reached at 4157550619 (I do prefer texts) or email medicalmaryjane@gmail.com

Thank you much and I’m very much looking forward to throwing this feast for my community.
