MORE WAYS TO "GREEN" YOUR HOLIDAZE BY SHOPPING LOCALLY

from jennieffeiffer

The Sunday Shop and Swap Sales on the Square will be back this December for your buying, selling, swapping pleasure, Sunday's from 11:00 to 2:00, at Brighton Square, between the Post Office and the Book Exchange. Show up early to set up if you're wanting to sell. Check in at Uniquities Variety Thrift & Gift and Really Good Pet Food Emporium, (which is also our local LEGO LAND) to reserve space. Uniquities is open noon to 5:00, daily behind Seashore Realty and the Bookstore, and has a selection of wreaths, ornaments, wrapping paper, as well as hand made jewelry and hand knits, knitting supplies, cards, baby items, toys antiques, collectibles, art, artifacts, vintage delights, and many loved and released items waiting for that new home with just the right person.

While you're there, check out Michael's Book Exchange, and 2 Mile Surf Shop, then on to Wharf to BoBolicious Smoothie Lounge, Om Garden, Bolinas Bay Hardware and Mercantile with beautiful quilts and kitchen ware as well as tools to make life easier, two more surf shops (Buzz's has cozy, affordable lined flannel shirts, and more), and additional wearables at Chameleon and Kaleidoscope. There's art at the many Open Studios, the Gallery, and the Museum Mini Show. You can get Smiley's dollars at the bar, and lots of cool stuff at the Bolinas Peoples' Store, the Bolinas Market, and Murch's farm stand - or you can give your loved ones gas for the holidays at Bo Gas. Also, don't forget the upcoming Bolinas Community Center Winter Faire with all the many craftspeople there and around town, happy to sell a gift certificate for someone you love. Coast Cafe also has gift certificates. Happy local shopping!

submitted by JenniePfeiffer, who will be back with weekly recaps in two weeks, after the Local Zone Phone Directory is printed, hopefully in time for the Winter Faire.

In the meantime, check out Patrice's entertaining play at the BCC tonight, tomorrow, and Sunday. Be amazed at the talents of your friends and neighbors!

READING TO JOHN

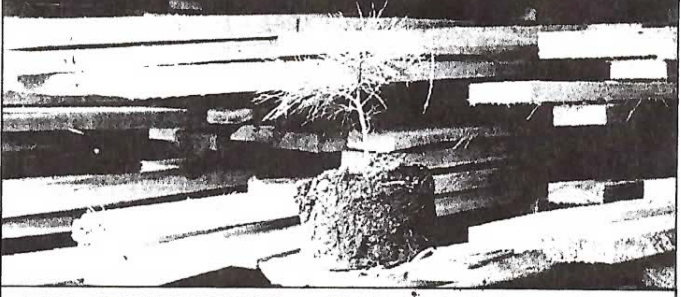

On Tues. 12/3 at 10 am on KWMR (89.9) I'll read Sherwood Anderson's "The Egg." This piquant short story explores the age-old question, woven through the narrative of a lad whose hapless father hopes to improve his lot, first via chicken-raising, then by running a restaurant. Small town Ohio and both prospects are pretty dim. I'll finish up with reviews.

Marine council wants more info on mice plan

POINT REYES LIGHT

November 21, 2013

By Samantha Kimmey

A U.S. Fish and Wildlife plan to eradicate invasive house mice from the South Farallon Islands met opposition and criticism during a meeting of the Gulf of the Farallones National Marine Sanctuary Advisory Council on Wednesday.

The Fish and Wildlife Service, which began scoping for a draft environmental impact statement a few years ago, says that the invasive mice harm the ashy storm petrel population, a species of special concern, and the larger ecosystem on the islands. The draft E.I.S. includes one no-action alternative and two action alternatives that would use rodenticides, either brodifacoum or diphacinone, to eradicate the mice, in several applications.

Although the service will ultimately choose which action to take, it must obtain roughly 16 permits before pursuing an action alternative, and one of those will most likely need to come from the marine sanctuary. Ann Morkill, a project manager for the service, said the position of the advisory council, which can make recommendations to the sanctuary's superintendent Maria Brown, "would weigh very much" on agency decisions.

During the public comment period, concerns were raised about whether or not the federal agency understood the collateral damage of the rodenticides in the long term. Speakers cited the case of Rat Island off Alaska, where 46 bald eagles and over 400 other birds died due to a mismanaged eradication project that involved Island Conservation, which is also a partner in the Farallones project. Ms. Morkill said that Fish and Wildlife was "learning lessons from Rat Island."

Susan Kegley, who heads the Pesticide Research Institute in Berkeley and was invited to present on Wednesday, said brodifacoum has "a very long plasma half life" and can take over three weeks to kill small animals, leading to a high risk of secondary poisonings. She voiced serious concerns about impacts to seagulls, which are highly sensitive to brodifacoum.

Once the mice were gone, she worried the owls, which are attracted by the mice but also eat the petrel eggs, would eat the adult birds themselves. She asked why the regular physical removal of owls was not a serious option.

Ms. Kegley also asked how necessary the plan was, given that Fish and Wildlife has declined to list the petrel as an endangered species, and suggested that the D.E.I.S. underestimated the risks of brodifacoum and overestimated the risks of diphacinone.

Since Devries, who was the acting national integrated pest management coordinator for Fish and Wildlife Service for two years and worked at the federal agency 22 years, commented that the plan "frankly is unnecessary." She added that an eradication project could be undertaken in the future if a better way was found.

Representatives of Wildcare and the Environmental Action Committee urged the council not to endorse the action alternatives. "Each creature that consumes this poison, directly or indirectly... will bleed to death, and bleed to death slowly," said Kelle Kacmarcik of Wildcare.

The advisory council voted 5-2 for a resolution expressing concerns about the DEIS and requesting more data about potential impacts to sanctuary waters. After the meeting ended, a Fish and Wildlife spokesman, Doug Cordell, said owl relocation would be "endless" and expensive. He said Ms. Kegley overstated harm to gulls based on a misunderstanding of the D.E.I.S., and that the absence of mice would not lead owls to eat petrels because once mice were gone, a time gap would preclude the owls from being there at the same time as the petrels. In general, Mr. Cordell felt that some claims were "factually inaccurate" and others taken out of context. Mr. Cordell and Ms. Kelgey also debated whether or not the ashy storm petrel were in decline or not on the islands.

To learn about the eradication plan and to comment until Dec. 9, visit regulations.gov.

BCPUD REJECTS ERADICATION PLAN

At their regular meeting last Wednesday BCPUD voted unanimously to write a letter stating. "In light of the serious potential for harm posed by the use of these toxic products, we urge the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service not to proceed with the aerial broadcast of rodenticides on the South Farallon Islands, but rather to employ a responsible, non-toxic and environmentally sustainable approach to mice eradication".

Let's find a way to deal with rodents that doesn't involve polluting our environment with deadly poisons.

Poisoning the sanctuary

Dear Editor,

At a public hearing last week before the Gulf of the Farallones National Marine Sanctuary Advisory Council, six energized women, including a scientist with extensive experience in pest management, gave testimony. All passionately opposed a U.S. Fish and Wildlife proposal to drop by helicopter 2,904 pounds of highly toxic and long-lasting rodenticides on the Southwest Farallon Islands during the rainy season.

Each of the speakers cited numerous unintended consequences that would likely be triggered, including the suffering and death of many non-target species as well as toxic run-off that would flow into the bay and enter the food chain. Some noted that Island Conservation, the agency that would presumably administer the plan if it were adopted, had previously mishandled a similar operation on Rat Island in Alaska, causing disastrous collateral damage.

Based on the testimony, the advisory council voted to reject the rodenticide proposal and to instead encourage sanctuary management to let caution prevail while they seek more information. Although their advice is not binding, it carries much weight.

Two noteworthy actions have taken place since that vote last Wednesday. First, the Bolinas Community Public Utility District voted unanimously to oppose the aerial dropping of rodenticides and to send a letter to that effect to our elected representatives.

Second, in light of the proposal's unacceptable risks, a brilliant idea for a permit and bonding requirement has been put forward by Richard Charter, a senior fellow of The Ocean Foundation and vice chair of the Farallones Advisory Council. In short, his idea is to establish as a condition of the rodenticide permit that Island Conservation and any subcontractor post an extremely high surety bond in order to cover any and all accidental damage to sanctuary waters or to terrestrial, avian and marine wildlife.

While this has not yet been voted on, it has already received much support.

Richard emphasizes that the council's recommendation of a surety bond would not imply endorsement of the rodenticide proposal, but only serve as protection if—in the worst-case scenario—the proposal were to be adopted as is. He can be reached at waterway@monitor.net.

If you wish to make your opinion known to those who will decide whether or not to dump massive quantities of rat poison over the Farallon Islands, visit regulations.gov. In the search box, write: rodent eradication farallon. A screen will appear displaying the issue near the top. On the right side, you will see "Comment Period Closed," but you may click on the blue words "Open Docket Folder" and a new screen will appear with a blue box that says: "Comment Now!" Click on that and proceed according to directions.

Comments may also be mailed to: Public Comments Processing, Attn: FWS-R8-NWRS-2013-0036, Division of Policy and Directives Management, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, 4401 N. Fairfax Drive, MS 2042-PDM, Arlington, VA 22203. All comments must be received by Dec. 9.
