Friday Film Review by Jenny Riviere

The Week Of (2018)

*Adam Sandler
Chris Rock
Steve Buscemi
Rachel Dratch*

I decided to break away from drama and go for a film with one of my favorite comedy duos Chris Rock and Adam Sandler. You throw in Steve Buscemi and it's a powerhouse. Available on Netflix, it's about two fathers coming together for the impending wedding of their kids. They have different ideas, different backgrounds, chaos all around, which of course is where the comedy comes in, and there are the touching moments that warm your heart.

Larner Seeds Demonstration Garden said to be celestial this year. A recent visitor said, "It reminds me of heaven"

We can't take credit; it mostly happened without us.

This is a perfect time to make your way over to the Larner Seeds Demonstration Garden. Every year brings new information about California's spring phenomenon. The late rains this year show how critical the timing of rain can be for wildflower displays. These late rains, beginning in March, have had an amazing effect on what we thought was going to be an average year at best.

There's nothing average about this month.

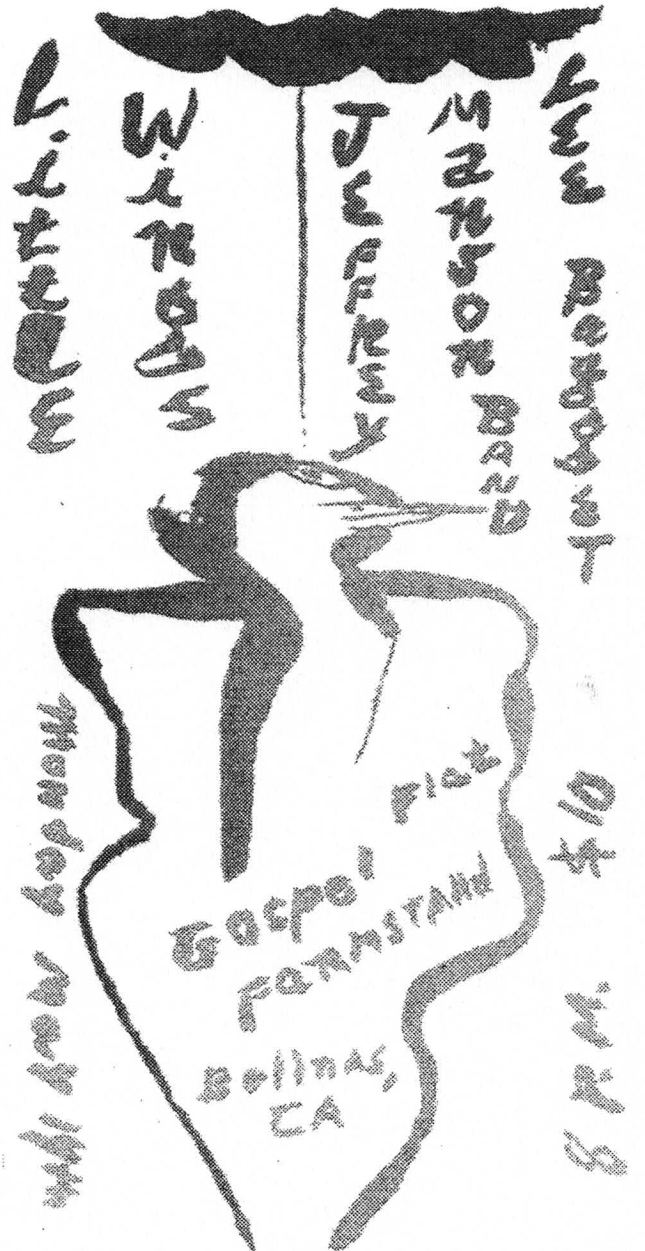

One remarkable feature is how few things we planted, how much came back and multiplied "on its own." What a wonderful feeling that is.

We will be having an informal tour of the Garden on several Saturdays in May: 5/12, 19 and 26.

"Flavored waters" will be served.

For directions, go to link on website, or turn north on Grove Road off Overlook. We are at 230 Grove Road, the second gate down on the right. "Flavored waters" will be served. Or call 415-868-9407 and we'll give you a ride! Maybe.

Life-long Bolinas resident Erica Zoe Willig passed away on May 1, 2018. She was born June 13, 1973.

Erica loved her mother Karen and her father Curtis. She adopted Pat Dickens as her second mother. Erica worked for years caring for animals, and that led her to caring for people at various health centers and doctors' offices. She was a gentle soul who had a knack for giving comfort to others.

Erica graduated from Bolinas Stinson School, Marin Academy, and Humboldt State University minus one course...the cursed statistics. She played flute in the Tuesday Night Band with Dave Murray and was known for her midnight forays into the freezer for Cookie Dough Ice Cream. From her father she inherited a love for sports cars, even though her last car was a humble, safe and reliable Subaru. From her mother, she inherited a love of movies and reading.

She will be greatly missed by her friends and family near and far.

The funeral will be held on Monday, May 7, 2 p.m., at the Bolinas cemetery gravesite. Reception will follow at the home of Karen Willig, 205 Larch Road.

Rob Cox and Marius Starkey Exhibit Paintings in Bolinas, CA

Bolinas, CA, May 4-31, 2018 – San Francisco painters Rob Cox and Marius Starkey will exhibit paintings at the Bolinas Gallery, Wharf Road, Bolinas, CA, for the month of May. This is a unique opportunity to view work by two artists working in the "California Impressionist" style.

Rob and Marius have been working artists in the Bay Area for over 30 years. Both painters use a painterly and very coloristic approach to their work.

Marius Starkey is an American painter known for his bold colors with emphasis on landscapes and figurative paintings. He received a BA degree from Baker University in Baldwin, Kansas and did his graduate studies where he received a Masters degree at Croydon College in London, England. He has had numerous exhibitions in Northern California and in San Francisco. He has exhibited his work in various cities across the country as well as abroad in places like Osaka, Japan and London, England.

Rob Cox paints the urban landscape as well as figures and everyday objects. Rob celebrates the material of paint and wants the viewer to see the process of painting. The scumbled brush strokes and lumps of paint are as integral to the work as the illusion of a roadway in the distance."

Rob's work is a Pop style with muddy underpinnings. It germinates in the works of Paul Cezanne, David Park and Richard Diebenkorn. Representational painting is a foundation to push images beyond their literal explanation and then pull back into the object to create a restrained tension of something slightly off kilter. He sees the thing as new, somehow more precious than the original.

Gallery hours are Saturday and Sunday from Noon – 7:00 and by appointment.

Artists Opening Reception on Saturday, May 12, from 12:00-7:00.

Living soap opera lives, the Stuart kings and queens, colorful, dramatic, and controversial, gave us riveting stories as they rode the roller coaster of the 17th century.

Development risks at Coast Guard complex

By Richard Vacha

first published in the Point Reyes Light, 04/26/2018
submitted by Janine Aroyan

As I read about converting the Coast Guard housing complex to affordable housing, I just have to ask the elephant-in-the-room question: What is the sewage plan? Many of your readers may not remember the battles over a sewage plant in Point Reyes, back in 1989. I took a role in opposing the whole idea on the grounds that 1) it would be an environmental disaster waiting to happen if it was built, as it had to be, right on top of the San Andreas fault at the most sluggish end of long, shallow Tomales Bay and 2) it would catastrophically change the character of our town.

There was a triumvirate of supporters. First, local ranchers and developers who dreamed of the profits to be made if land in town could be zoned at higher densities. Second, local businesses, always hungry for more customers. Third, the Coast Guard, which built its housing facility without a sewage system and had to truck their effluent up to the Two Rock facility.

We were accused of getting in the way of progress and (god forbid) "zoning by infrastructure." You see, one of the only things keeping West Marin from rapid urbanization are the septic limitations. The old-boy developers saw the possibility at last of the four-lane freeways and the cloverleaf over Point Reyes Station that big-thinkers conceptualized and drew up before the national seashore became a reality.

The issue came to a crescendo at a high-attendance town-hall meeting. There was obviously overwhelming opposition, and there were no compelling reasons in favor, and the issue was dropped. The fear mongering claims by developers that septic systems were failing all over town were disputed by the county health department. The Coast Guard tried to bring it up again five years later, but the pig did not smell any better, and it was dropped and never came up again.

But developers never sleep, and I fear they are already lining up to use the altruistic sentiments for an affordable housing project as a wedge to at last get some kind of sewage system that will allow the high-density zoning they have always dreamed of. Affordable housing, like all social welfare efforts, is tricky. Other people's money often has strings attached. The devil is in the details.

I still regret that, 10 years later, I did not take a more active stand against the so-called affordable housing project that did go in right behind town. I let myself get talked out of opposition by well-meaning town leaders who put out the hope that some of our beloved but poor local community members would be able to afford a house at last. I should have asked more questions.

The project went forward, but the financing was not properly secured—it was all empty promises—and newly elected President George Bush cancelled the funding just after the project was started. The houses mostly sold at market rate, several to absentee owners. Few locals got a chance. It was a development scam, and I felt hoodwinked. I'd hate to see something like that happen again, especially since time has kind of caught up with us anyway, in the form of social media, demographics and relentless business marketing bringing the unprecedented quantum leap in tourism we have experienced over the last few years. We have moved out to the limits of our infrastructure again, and good solutions to the traffic are not likely to come from business owners or our developer-oriented county leaders.

Preserving land involves an inherent contradiction: high demand for the healthy and beautiful location drives prices up. But affordable housing is part of a healthy community. It is a problem all over the country. Solutions easily tempt the laws of unintended consequences.

Vigilance is a must!
