Father Figures (2017)

*Ed Helms
 Owen Wilson
 Glenn Close
 Ving Rhames
 Terry Bradshaw
 J.K. Simmons
 Christopher Walken*

After finally hearing the truth from their mother, (Glenn Close), twins Kyle and Peter head out on a journey to find the father they thought was deceased, and they discover things about each other and their very different lives. Armed with only a few clues, courtesy of their mother, they put their differences aside for the journey. Each father figure they meet, from Terry Bradshaw (playing himself), to J.K. Simmons, teaches them something about who their mother was as they knew her in the 70's. Ed Helms of the Hangover films, and Owen Wilson are great comic actors, but I particularly enjoyed the more touching moments between them.

Screening: A Short Film by Ole Schell – Community Center Benefit

Good people, I have made a short film about two boys going on an adventure in Bolinas in the 1980s. The film features real Bolinas kids and first time actors, Logan Malvin, Marius Salone, Lana Glavis and Sadie Mann. It also features Temple, who some may recognize from Jerry's play. This film is based on a full feature length script I wrote over the past year and half called Ragman's Cave. We shot the short film every day after school for two and a half weeks using the resources we had and the locations we all grew up in. I was able to spend time with Logan and Marius and see the town again through their eyes. We have the same shortcuts, same trees and even the occasional grown up yelling at us to slow down on our motorcycles.

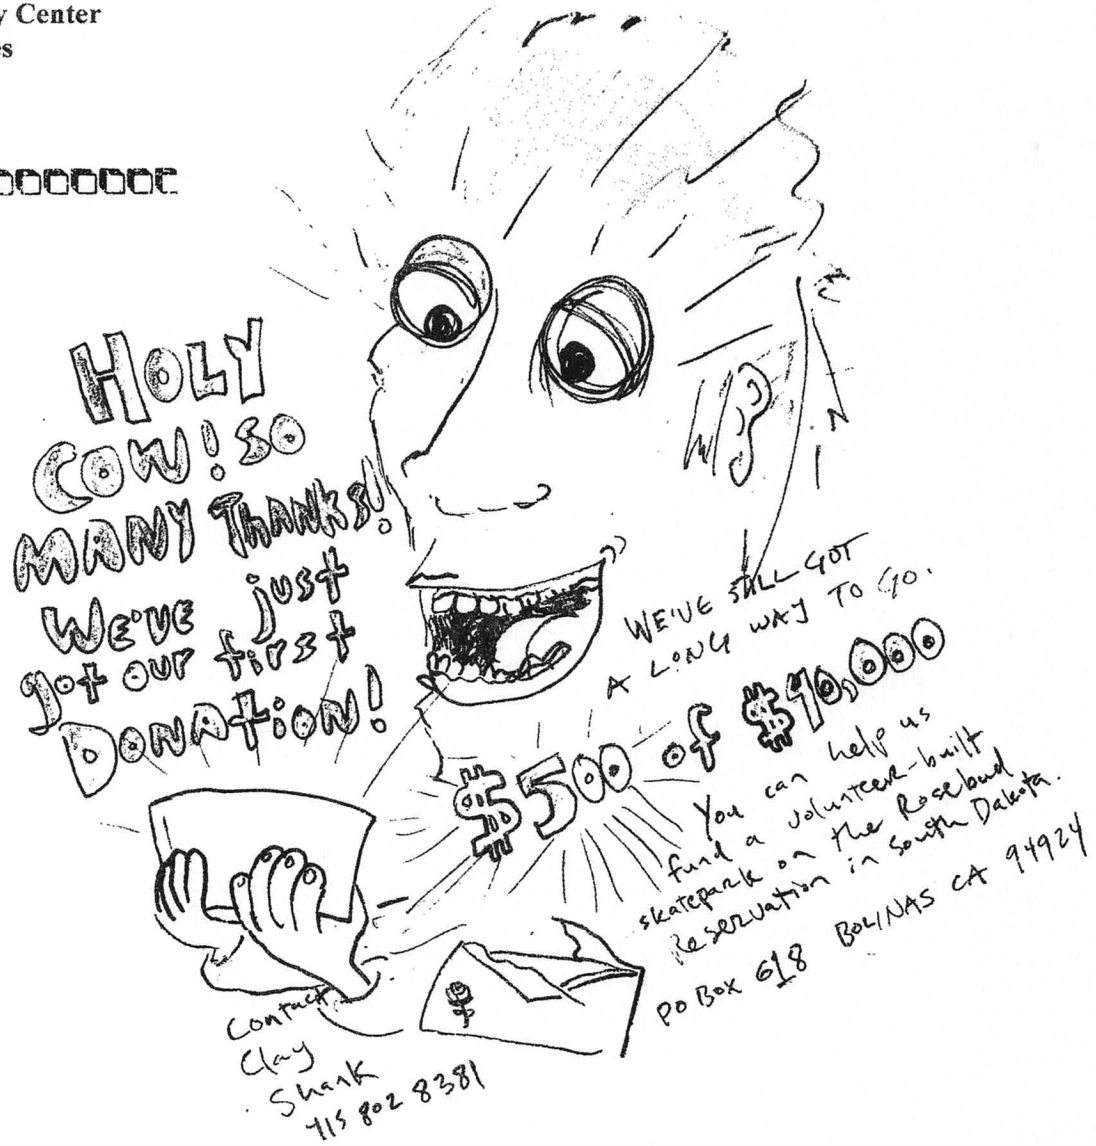

We will be screening at the Community Center. Donations for a new projector, screen and sound system for the community center will be accepted but not expected. There will be drama, there will be laughter and there will be an epic 80s police car and motorcycle chase. This short is a glimpse of a larger feature film I hope to make.

There will be refreshments and popcorn. We will start hanging out over snacks and drinks, followed by the film, a Q & A and then we can hang some more! It's a short film so it won't run late. Those who want to can stay after for a drink and revelry.

Date: Sunday August 12th
Time 7:30 pm
Location: Bolinas Community Center
Film Running Time 15 minutes

Dear Community, I lost my beautiful walking stick at the Downtown Park on June 16th after the Sun Festival/ Baby Blessing Celebration. I have many wonderful memories from walks around town with friends and my walking stick. Please contact me if you found it. Your reward will be in making me a very happy and grateful person. A blessing for both of us. Thank You, Mary Barror; 415-868-0902

Just so you know:

Welcome Leilani Fraser to our BCLT Family!

We are excited to announce we found a replacement for Evie Wilhelm, our managing director while she is away on maternity leave from Oct. 1st – Jan. 1st!!

Leilani Fraser will be working with us to keep our office running smoothly and we look forward to keeping her on part time as an office administrator into the new year. Leilani grew up in Bolinas and has recently moved back to raise her daughter here. She is extremely qualified for the job and we are proud to have her.

Dear Hearsay Crossword Puzzlers, here are the answers I promised to provide so long ago. I'm sorry for the mistakes on the second row: 15-Across should have had an additional square for the "y" in "Labor Day." 16-Across should have been a black square. 17-Across ("eat and swim") should have started one square earlier and the square for the "i" should have been open. The last square should have been black.

Look for a new puzzle in this Friday's Hearsay! Yes, the answers to that puzzle will be published on time.

Scientists for Wired Technology (scientists4wiredtech.com) took this photo at 721 Link Lane on 1/31/18 in Santa Rosa, CA of a 4G/5G Close Proximity Microwave Radiation Antenna - Wireless Telecommunications Facility (CPMRA-WTF) - aka "small cell" cell phone tower

War gaming the science on cell phones and health risks: A conversation with journalist Mark Dowie

Reprinted from the Pt. Reyes Light: [Part 2 - Part 1 was in the 7-13-2018 Hearsay]

Mark: ... Evidence is accumulating. Five years from now, I might very well be sitting right here telling you, "Yes, non-ionizing radiation is a carcinogen." But right now, I think that the most compelling fact is that a long-term heavy dose of pulsed non-ionizing radiation can break DNA strands, which is a precursor of cancer. And look, DNA is everywhere. It's not just in humans. It's in every living thing. Radiation is affecting the grass on your lawn. It's affecting the bees, birds and trees.

Maybe this year, but certainly next year, the World Health Organization and its International Agency for Research on Cancer are going to reconsider their classification of cell phone radiation. They recently increased its classification from a 3 ("not classifiable") to 2B—"possibly carcinogenic." There are scientists at WHO who want to push it immediately to 2A—"a probable carcinogen."

Jim: What about this onslaught that's being conducted by the industry to foist 5G on cities and rural areas?

Mary Beth: Do you think that we'll have to worry out here in West Marin about 5G, the soon-to-be-rolled-out fifth generation of wireless technology?

Mark: Not immediately. 5G is going to be the heart of so-called smart cities, smart cars, smart transportation, smart everything. That's going to be concentrated in urban areas. Of course, one goal of the wireless industry is to overcome the so-called "digital divide," which means people in the country aren't getting the wonders of wireless that people in the cities are getting. There will be more wireless technology brought into the rural areas of the world, yes. But I still don't think it'll ever get to the point where it is in cities, where you've got the entire city driving itself on smart devices, and seven towers zapping one location at once. We focus on cell phones because we carry them around. Smart phones are everywhere, but just one of thousands and thousands of devices in the so-called "Internet of Things," the collective product that will be served by 5G.

Mary Beth: How serious a health hazard do you think 5G could become?

Mark: I don't think wireless will ever be a big, bad carcinogen like tobacco, where you can't live a long life if you use it. I think it's going to affect a small number of humans, the "power users" and screen-addicted children who are exposed all day. But the numbers are deceiving. Right now, there are a billion people in the world smoking tobacco. We know from long-term epidemiology that about 5 percent of them will get cancer every year. And about 1 percent of those people will die. That's about eight million people in the world dying every year as a consequence of smoking—one half of 1 percent of all smokers, right?

If you take that low cancer death rate from tobacco and transplant it to cell phones, with its universe of six billion users, you get a significant number. Again, a very low rate—half of 1 percent. But crunch that number. It produces a huge number of cancers, 30 million worldwide, every year—about eight times the current global rate of new cancers. And that's just from cell phones. Wireless radiation is almost everywhere, and it's invisible, silent and odorless. You can't escape it, as you can from second-hand smoke. We're being zapped, unknowingly wherever we are, along with every other living organism on the planet.

Mary Beth: I'm sure you came across the fact that there are very small windows of exposure that have huge effects, right?

Mark: Say more.

Mary Beth: Harm from radio frequency-modulated electromagnetic fields isn't only dose-dependent; it is also cumulative. Studies show there are some small windows of exposure, very tiny amounts that, because they are so similar to a bodily function frequency, really cause problems, especially with chronic exposure.

Mark: Yeah, that's probably true. And it's wave pulsation, not the waves themselves, which are virtually harmless, that appear to damage DNA and sperm, while compromising the blood-brain barrier.

Mary Beth: Who regulates the wireless industry?

Mark: The F.C.C., but they're essentially powerless. They can set the standard absorption rates for cell phones and other radiation emitting devices, but they can't spank anyone for exceeding the standard. They have no police power. The F.D.A. does and so does the E.P.A., but not over wireless products. That was taken from them by the Telecommunications Act of 1996, a creation of Al Gore and to my mind the original sin against wireless regulation. The bill took all wireless regulatory power away from the F.D.A., C.D.C. and E.P.A. The E.P.A. can still shut down a factory if it's causing a public health problem, but not if the origin is wireless. And the F.C.C. can't shut down anything that is emitting dangerous levels of non-ionizing radiation. They can take a license from a broadcaster if someone says "shit" on the air, but they can't take anything away from anybody who's pumping excess radiation into the environment. Thank you Al Gore.

Mary Beth: Do you have advice for wireless device users?

Mark: Sure, I direct them to the fine print on their own phone, which few people have ever seen. It's a vague, difficult-to-find, arcane warning, in very small print, about the standard absorption rate of the radiation from their device. Then I ask them: "You have children? You see your child sitting on the couch with their device over their lap? Yank it out of their hands. They're zapping their reproductive organs." Many studies show that sperm and ovaries can be permanently damaged by non-ionizing radiation. That might not lead to death, but it could create serious birth defects in their children. And Mary Beth, don't carry your cell phone in your bra.

Mary Beth: (laughing) Of course not.

Mark: A lot of women do that. I have to tell you that I wrote a very cynical conclusion to this article that I expected The Nation wouldn't run. I was right, they didn't. But I just had to predict somewhere that if the suspected hazards of wireless radiation turn out to be real, and we keep “progressing” from one generation of wireless technology to another, and never stop to consider the possible consequences, 500 years from now only a very few, very rare humans who are not sensitive to E.M.F./R.F. radiation will have survived. The more important point that did stay in the article is that the objective we are all pursuing here, as activists and journalists, is informed consent. Like participants in a clinical trial, a community cannot give consent to new installations of anything until it is informed. That’s your job, and you’re doing it well. But it should also be the responsibility of industry, local government, elected representatives and the public utilities that are allowing their infrastructure to host radiation-emitting technology. And they are all either withholding what they know, outright lying about it or simply ignoring sound science and public health on their way to the bank. And, of course, informing consent should also be the responsibility of media, which is why I took on this assignment, with the intention of focusing on an industry that, by war gaming science and deliberately manufacturing doubt, may be creating a serious public health problem.
