Jet Black Pearl
Bolinas Museum Free Courtyard Concert
Saturday August 10, 2 PM

Spend your afternoon with the one-woman dynamo Jet Black Pearl (Jetty Swart), as she sings and accompanies herself on the accordion, flute, human beatbox, toy piano, loop station and more! Originally from the Netherlands, Jet Black Pearl breaks down conventional genres combining pop, folk, rap and more into dramatic and satirical songs that have been described as a cabaret gypsy party where Nina Hagen and Edith Piaf meet Laurie Anderson and Björk.

Recently, 25 interns from John Jeavons's Bountiful Gardens came to Larner Seeds in Bolinas for a tour. It was vivifying to spend some time with this diverse & enthusiastic, international group. Since Jeavons's project focuses on bio-intensive food production, the group looked at our restoration garden from a distinctly human-use horticultural perspective which helped me to further understand the multi-species oriented work we do here.

The group took great interest in our collection of California native food plants such as Plantain (Plantago subnuda), Yampa (Perideridia kelloggii) &, of course, California Chia (Salvia columbaria). I felt a buzz run through as the crowd realized that some marginalized native species could be grown for food, thus benefiting both the local human & indigenous plant communities. One student inquired about using native, nitrogen-fixing annuals, such as lupines as cover crop in his vegetable garden, an interesting blend of these two worlds. Indeed, agricultural questions about yields & growing season length abounded: questions which needed translation to the slower, more circuitous realm of the restoration garden, whose goals are more layered than those of a food producing garden.

While I was pointing out coyote bush, a young woman from Bangalore asked about its uses. I described the plant's function as a nurse plant for the coastal sage scrub community, helping other plants get established. I pointed out its value as habitat for quail & the myriad beneficial pollinators that it attracts. "Yes," she replied, "but what are its USES?" For some, it seems, a plant is only useful if you can consume it or enjoy its pretty flowers.

As global human population approaches 8 billion, there is no doubt that the work of John Jeavons & others in growing food sustainably is essential. However, to be real stewards of this planet, we must take a perspective that nurtures biodiversity beyond human use, extending our efforts toward a wider web of life on this planet.

Thought you might be interested in this:

The most recent issue of The New Yorker contains a letter to the editor from Dr. Mike Witte. The substance concerns a "potential flaw" in a project to spread safer childbirth practices, but the significance, for the Hearsay perhaps to publish, is national recognition of our local physician. Attached is a scanned copy of his letter.

-Nate Siedman

THE BIRTH OF IDEAS

There is a potential flaw in Atul Gawande's BetterBirth Project, which seeks to spread safer childbirth practices through neonatal intervention ("Slow Ideas," July 29th). In another initiative, in the nineteen-eighties, a group of Western midwives worked in remote villages in Nepal to teach local birth attendants how to prevent neonatal tetanus, which was killing large numbers of infants.

With immunization clinics, the group was able to achieve measurable improvements in neonatal survival. But the death rate of children under five years remained stubbornly high. Many of those who might have died as newborns were doomed to die as toddlers. The innovations cannot stop with improved neonatal mortality statistics.

Some weeks back, we wondered where our West Marin Coastal Token was minted. Peter did some research & came back with these interesting details from Richard Kirchman:

"The company that makes the coins has their die-cutting plant & office in L.A. The coins are struck at their stamping mint in Ohio. They are solid brass."

Tuesday July 30

Bolinas 6:46 p.m. A group of hikers reported that they had lost the other half of their hiking party 5-6 hours ago and were growing concerned for their welfare. Everybody accounted for and emergency search averted.

Wednesday July 31

Bolinas 1:55 p.m. Three juveniles with dogs chased the seals on the sandbar. Responding party is concerned about affects on the natural habitat of the above seals.

Bolinas 10:13 p.m. Woman called to report that her child's father has been harassing her. Woman could not describe any details of any harassment but states that he does have a drinking problem and that he has harassed other people in the past. Woman abruptly ended call by hanging up but not before stating "Thank you for letting me vent."

Friday August 2

Bolinas 4:51 p.m. Two adults and a child chasing the seals off the island in the lagoon. Responding party has already yelled at them but would like them counseled on how to interact appropriately with nature.

Wharf Road Diptych '65/'66 Oil on Canvas

Taos-based painter Charles Strong passed away on Sunday July 28th. He lived in Bolinas in the mid-sixties during which time he created his Wharf Road series of large, abstract expressionist canvases. What follows are some reminiscences of his time here, lifted from the catalog of his 1990 Bolinas Museum Show. - Submitted by Linda Samuels.

Looking Back

On our return to the United States, after ten months in England in 1964, we began a search to find a house and studio in West Marin. After looking at several farm houses near Point Reyes Station, my first wife, artist Deanna Forbes, and I contacted our friend and former Humanities Professor, poet Ken Lash. Ken was living in Bolinas in a cottage owned by long-term resident Heidi Ryan, located behind Pepper's General Store, and was shortly moving to a farm house on the Lagoon. For fifty dollars a month we took over his shingled four room cottage and continued a search for a studio. I rented a double car garage on the Mesa in which several paintings were completed in rather tough conditions of no natural light or heat in December 1964.

At that point a gutted apartment above Scowley's restaurant in the present Bolinas Museum Building became available which I rented. It was a fine, warm studio with windows facing Wharf Road for the grand price of fifteen dollars per month.

The West Marin artists that we were aware of in the early 1960's included Dean Fleming, living in a old dairy farm in Muir Beach (which he passed on to other California School of Fine Arts artists) and Craig Hanson in Bolinas. Another farm above Stinson Beach housed Mel and Carla Moss, followed by Robert Hudson, Cornelia Schultz and Richard and Martha Shaw. Robert and Cornelia had also lived on a farm right before the mail boxes on the Lagoon Road for a while. Sculptor Paul Harris, painter Arthur Okamura, and furniture maker Art Carpenter were well established Bolinas residents at the time.

We lived a quiet, productive, enjoyable life in Bolinas which was shattered by our interest in Rock and Roll music and the tragedy of the Vietnam War. We moved to San Francisco in 1966.

For two years Bolinas was a gentle paradise to live and make art in.

About FOCUS.

It seems quite fitting that the first FOCUS exhibition spotlights paintings done by Charles Strong. Twenty five years ago these paintings came to life in a studio above the room in which they are now being exhibited. Just as the McDonalds have renovated and brought the Museum building back to life, these paintings have had a rebirth in their original home.

The Bolinas Museum has created the yearly FOCUS exhibition as a way of recognizing the work of mature artists who have lived for some part of their lives in West Marin. This is the first in what we hope to be an important series revealing the variety and high quality of art in West Marin.

MOROCCAN FEAST, STORIES AND SLIDES

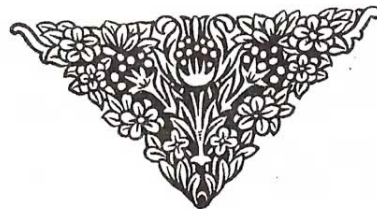

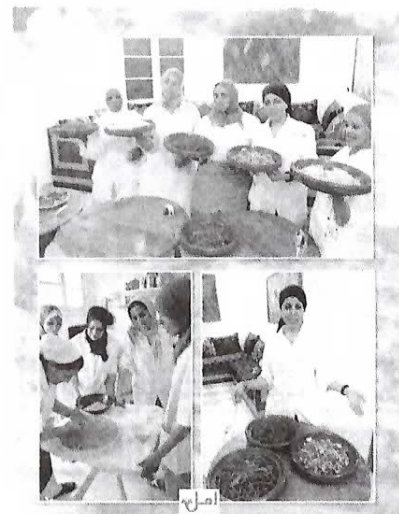

FUNDRAISER ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, Bolinas Community Center

Ciara D'Onofrio recently returned from Morocco where she worked with The Amal Center, a new non-profit organization in Marrakech dedicated to supporting and training Moroccan women from disadvantaged backgrounds, including illiterate, impoverished, and sexually and physically abused women, single mothers, and women who worked as child maids. The Center has a restaurant that the women run while being trained in Moroccan baking and cooking. All of the women at The Amal Center are the sole financial supporters of their families, a rarity in Morocco. All profits from this fundraiser will go to support The Amal Center. To learn more about The Amal Center visit hope-amal.org

June Kleider and her family also recently returned from Morocco where they studied Moroccan cooking. June will be heading the Moroccan feast and sharing her culinary experiences in Morocco with our community through a delicious dinner.

Please come learn about these Bolinians' experiences in Morocco and support The Amal Center!
