OLLI: What Economists Know About Important Policy Issues
10/19/2019 - 1:30 pm to 3:15 pm

Economics plays a central role in the functioning of every aspect of society. It plays this role primarily through the actions of governments at the federal, state, and local levels. Given the centrality of the role of economics, this course will address a set of prominent policy issues for which economics is at the core. We will explore what the economics profession collectively understands to be true about the issue, while not prescribing a specific policy solution.

What Happened

10-14-19 Monday Morning Recap
from Jenny Pfeller

It was a crazy sort of a week with picture perfect weather but no electricity for three days, so a race to use up defrosting food before it spoiled, and a scramble to find ways to make sure children were accommodated. There was no school Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, because of a lapse in imagination by us, the Board of Trustees, along with our administrators — so no Plan "B" with alternative ways to continue school for our students, i.e. field trips, (maybe to fire stations or school districts where power was still on), gardening days, sports days, art and music days, classroom days with pencils and paper rather than computers and "white boards," all things that happen in our school on a regular basis anyway. It's probably a good time for us to incorporate this sort of planning into our Strategic Plan update, because it appears we are full on into "PG&E Power from the People" days due to climate change with fire danger, etc. No rain, too much rain, high winds, no wind, flooding, tsunami, earthquakes, or whatever else comes along. It seems likely we will be experiencing power outages, so good to be prepared.

Speaking of being prepared for disasters, it's very comforting to know we have two such excellent fire chiefs here in our school district communities, Chief Stevens in Sutro Beach, and Chief Krikaner, in Bolinas, along with all the commendable volunteers. I was thinking this would have been and excellent time for a Disaster Drill, checking out our disaster coordinators and the various area neighborhoods, when there was no storm or true disaster to make things difficult. I was remembering past real disasters when we would have parties with grills to cook up defrosting food for community potlucks. I was envisioning our stores opening their freezers for ice cream for those kids out of school, and other such creative possibilities to deal in powerful ways with power-less days.

On one of those no-school days, granddaughter and I went into San Francisco to spend time at Fisherman's Wharf with visiting family, comming with the sea lions, and enjoying the sights—a super field trip. Unfortunately, we discovered it was Fleet Week, with LOUD displays of military aircraft in formations, ripping through the sky, one of the more precarious atmospheres, while so many people were dealing with power outages because of climate crisis. Go figure. "Fleet Week is a militaristic propaganda. It's also a grotesque display of military ostentation in an age of climate crisis."

Power was on in time for Saturday's Kindred Souls Reunion, the annual Big Mesa day to welcome Greg Schindel back to Bolinas for a blast from the past with music and dancing and great food.

The week ended last night with a sunset flash of green and then a full moon rise for the beach farewell to long ago community member Conrad Golich, who sadly died recently. Condolences to his family and friends.

It was an excellent night for a picnic up on the ridge, to enjoy the orange brilliance of the rising Hunter's Moon, aka Blood moon.

Closing here with Yom Kippur greetings to all those celebrating that opportunity for atonement, along with a vision of greater peace in this fragile world. JP

CALIFORNIA—TIME TO LEAVE

News Flash: Geologists and seismologists predict that within a year California will experience a MAJOR earthquake, with the attendant countless billions of dollars of damage, no few human deaths, and perhaps some fires. Therefore, the federal government has declared the state of California ‘unsafe’ and the state’s entire human population is being evacuated, indefinitely, to Nevada and Arizona. Basically, California is closed.

This far-sighed, yet some might say utterly asinine, decision should come as no surprise to those thousands of people for whom PG&E recently shut down power in Marin County, simply because a weather forecast, that bastion of reliability, predicted high winds and therefore the possibility of fires caused by downed power lines. But let’s face it, the chances of lines blowing down and causing serious fires may be less than those of the current US president having an intelligent and ethical idea.

While might some argue that people should take responsibility for breathing oxygen, this is clearly an unreasonable view. After all, we live in an unusually high population densities in a seasonally very dry area, yet our entitled status demands that we have electricity in vast amounts 24/7 to engage in life’s essential activities, such as Facebook and streaming movies and videos. So when a fire actually happens, well, we obviously need somebody (else) to blame. A look in the mirror would identify the problem, but that’s too uncomfortable. Let’s blame the power company, or the weather forecast maybe. But not the burgeoning human population seemingly imbued at birth with the entitlement gene.

Residents in parts of Marin County were thus delighted to awaken this week to one after another of raging calm, cloudless blue mornings and find that some well-meaning higher power had turned off the electricity, for days—really. Then again, you can’t blame the power companies—if entitled white people threaten to sue them as being the cause of damaging fires, then it’s human nature for PG&E to turn around and say “Screw You.” It’s merely paranoia dosed liberally (pun unavoidable) with the threat of litigation. (Thanks lawyers, once again.)

So the next time it seems that conditions might possibly, perhaps, lend themselves to the chance of high winds and fire, then “For your safety and inconvenience we’ll turn off the power so you whining ingrates will really have something to whine about.” Good for PG&E. And good for the economy as well—not just companies that sell generators or solar panels, but also for stores that sell foodstuffs, tens of thousands if not millions of dollars of which will have spoiled in fridges and freezers across the county. Good also for restaurants that can function, feeding all those people who cook with electricity. And of course, it’s generally good for one’s character to take cold showers for a few days, especially the old and infirm. And all those people desperately trying to eat food before it goes bad, well that couldn’t possibly lead to any health issues.

Let’s face it, for a primitive species that believes widely in fiction, be it gods of various strains, Father Christmas, democracy, and so on, to shut down power across large areas because of a weather forecast is par for the course. Indeed, ever since the last vestiges of common sense were seen scurrying north into Canada and south into Mexico a few years ago, the present fear-generated over-reaction is just one more step along our predestined path to idiocy, and we can surely look forward to many more such steps in years to come. Way to go, humans!
