OLLI: What Economists Know About Important Policy Issues
10/11/2019 - 1:30pm to 5:15pm
Economics plays a central role in the functioning of every aspect of society. It plays this role primarily through the actions of governments at the federal, state, and local levels. Given the centrality of the role of economics, this course will address a set of prominent policy issues for which economics is at the core. We will explore what the economics profession collectively understands to be true about the issue, while not prescribing a specific policy solution.

Location: Church.

Urban Farming in Washington D.C. – an exciting story

You can read the whole article and see pictures of the land and people described here by going to civieats.com. Civil Eats is a constantly interesting website. Gail Taylor, an African American woman has set up the first organic farm with CSA (community supported agriculture) in Washington D.C. She currently has about 200 CSA members, and city farms in seven locations. Rooftop farms are being planned.

Gail Taylor started out her work in Guatemala, promoting healing for women recovering from the trauma of civil war. Returning to the U.S., she began to share her passion for farming with other African Americans who recognized the power of food production to revitalize their communities. She approached the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, a Catholic order of missionaries with vacant land on their property. They were able to set up the D.C. Urban Farming and Security Act that allows a 90% reduction in property taxes to owners of vacant lots who create partnerships with independent urban farmers.

Gail Taylor and her group grow organic vegetables, herbs and flowers. She plants a third of her farmed areas with oats, rye and crimson clover as cover crops between plantings. Nearby orchards and farms run by women and farmers of color bring products like fruit, cheese, honey, rice, herbs and eggs. They donate food to soup kitchens and food pantries. Gail Taylor calls her CSA ‘Three Part Harmony’ because musicians in her family have created the music and the food together.

p.s. Deaths from vaping in the US have risen to 20. The number was 6 when I last reported 2 weeks ago. Do not vape. p.p.s. Melania Trump has continued to use and endorse the vegetable garden at the White House started by Michelle Obama. She invites children to visit, plant and understand how food is grown. The White House gardeners and kitchen tend to and serve the food daily. How’s that for good news?

Evidence of Mountain Lion Attacks in Paradise Valley

We lost one sheep last night and one goat on Thursday night in attacks which appear to be by a mountain lion. Based on inspection of the locations of the attacks (about 200 yards apart) am certain that it was a mountain lion. It was clear that the carcasses were dragged about 60 to 70 feet from initial attack. There were massive wounds, paw prints and both were covered with vegetation. The Dept. of Fish and Wildlife and the Sheriff’s office have been notified. We have moved our remaining sheep and goat to safer location.

THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

• It seems like a great year for quail—huge coves of the birds around our part of the Mesa.

• This morning’s ‘commute’ to work: walk with the doggie and Simone to the schoolbus, then continue the stroll on up to the BCPUD.

• Waiting through these warm Indian summer days for the first rains of autumn.

What Happened
10-7-19 Monday Morning Recap
from JenniePfeiffer

It was another over-filled week, with more things to do than time to do them, as we left September behind and moved quickly into October. We started the month on Tuesday, with some cool, fall-like days, then a hot weekend, reminding us that October has been a fire month, so it is important to give homes defensible space, take care with tools that can spark, and watch where those eigs go if you're a smoker (definitely refrain from tossing them out the car window!) and maybe it's a good time to do yourself and the rest of us all a favor and quit.

Tuesday brought a conflict of event timings, with an opening at the Stinson Beach Library of Molly Brown's botanical art students displaying their work; and in the opposite direction, at Point Reyes Books, Eric Karpeles was in conversation with, Maxim Osipov discussing Osipov's recent works, giving an intriguing look at the art of the short story. I enjoyed Osipov's comment that a short story differs from a novel in, of course, many ways, particularly noting that one can zip or dawdle through a novel, skipping around or doting off, and still have opportunity to catch the story, but with a short story, every word is important, well-chosen, part of a start-to-finish concise work, laid out in a more streamlined way. If asked what one of his short stories is about, he would advise the questioner to read it, as giving a synopsis would actually be telling the tale -- though he expressed it much more artfully than this.

Wednesday night there was a meeting at the Firehouse community room regarding the plans for the College of Marin Bolinas Biology Lab and dock. It was well attended and plans are moving forward for a tear-down-and-build-fresh procedure. I have to agree with Ralph Camicchia that it would be a lovely gesture to save a dormer to incorporate into the new structure, for historical veneration.

Friday was a Free Food Day Downtown, with Melinda Stone's USF students providing another day of community picnicking in the park -- such a lovely event then later in the day an opening at the Farmstand Gallery of Pavel Kruk's exhibit, "But People?" It's very like the short story in that you have to see it, because to explain it is telling the tale.

Saturday was another day all about visual and performing art, with Michael Sell's opening of excellent collage works at the Bolinas Art Gallery; and then a delightful multimedia performance piece, "A Little Tiny Star Is Born," at Gospel Flat, Blackberry Farm, with dancers from S.F. Ballet, and a buffet for the senses, along with the lovely soup, salad, bread, drink refreshments.

Closing this with a sad farewell to Miguel Hernandez, the well-regarded chef at 11 Wharf, who died suddenly this week, leaving way too soon. Condolences to his loved ones. Jp
