Raisins and Green Tea Can Help your Teeth and Gums

Dr. Christine D. Wu is a professor and Associate Dean for Research at the University of Illinois at Chicago College of Dentistry. For several years she has studied compounds that can fight the bacteria that cause cavities and gum disease. She has looked at antioxidant compounds in raisins and found that oleanolic acid in raisins inhibits the growth of two species of oral bacteria – Streptococcus mutans, which causes cavities, and Porphyromonas gingivalis, which causes periodontal (gum) disease. The compound blocked S. mutans from adhering to tooth surfaces. Adherence is crucial for bacteria to form dental plaque, the sticky biofilm consisting of oral bacteria that accumulates on teeth. When you eat a sugary meal, these bacteria release acids that erode the tooth enamel. "Raisins are perceived as sweet and sticky, said Dr. Wu, "and any food that contains sugar and is sticky is assumed to cause cavities. But our study suggests the contrary. Phytochemicals in raisins may benefit oral health by fighting bacteria that cause cavities and gum disease." However, bran cereals that have added sugar and raisins are not the best. Finding a cereal without added sugar such as oatmeal, and adding raisins to it would be better. Raisins can also be enjoyed as a snack, along with nuts, during the day. People with diabetes should test their blood sugar values if they snack on raisins, as data about this has been controversial.

The ability of tea to fight dental caries has been suggested for decades. The polyphenols in tea, especially EGCG (epigallocatechin gallate) have been shown to inhibit dental plaque accumulation, but the exact mechanisms are not clear. Dr. Wu and her colleagues think that EGCG suppresses genes in S. mutans and prevents the initial attachment of this bacterium to the teeth, and thus the formation of mature biofilms. The effects of EGCG on other properties of S. mutans were also studied. The research showed a dose dependent inhibition of the initial attachment of S. mutans and also an effect on the genes of this bacterium. These findings suggest that EGCG may represent a novel and natural way to inhibit biofilm formation on the teeth. EGCG is also being studied in laboratories throughout the world for its properties to combat many systemic diseases. Stay tuned.

You may be aware that green tea has much more EGCG than black tea, although they come from the same plant. Researchers have warned that excessive amounts of EGCG found in some supplements can lead to toxicity and liver damage, so it is prudent to avoid high doses of this supplement. Brew green tea and swish it around in your mouth before swallowing. Enjoy one or more cups a day, depending on your tolerance for caffeine. Green tea has about 1/3 to 1/2 the caffeine as coffee. Kukicha green tea is made of the

Ralph's Rain Report

Last 24 hours.	0.67 inches
This rain event	1.11. inches
Fri to this AM.

I was thinking, what is in an inch of rain?

First, rain is measured as a function of precipitation over a given time period. The normal time period is 24 hours, in real high rain areas and big storms the time function gets shortened to best represent the amount of rain falling. I try to check my gauge at 8AM and report the amount that was collected 8AM to 8AM, 24 hours. But, that doesn't give us the volume of rain that fell.

So, how much water is in an inch of rain?

If it rains 1.00 inch overnight, how much water did that produce? If a swimming pool collects an inch of rain the water level will ideally rise close to an inch, but there are variables to deal with.

Let's think of it this way. If we take a 20X100 parcel on the Mesa, make it perfectly level, get rid of trees, shrubs and obstacles such as buildings & fences, then put a one-inch lip around the perimeter and make it hold water, like a cake pan; and if it rains to the point the pan fills to the lip, we have one inch of rain. The 2000 sq feet of the pan, at one inch, will hold approximately 1250 gallons of water. Your 80X100 foot lot will collect 4 times that amount, about 5000 gallons which would be a tank with a 9-foot diameter X 12 feet tall. On a larger scale, it would be about 27,225 gallons per acre. Of course, there are many variables that enter into the equation, such as wind, raindrop distribution, wind deflection, splashing, angle of the rain, slope of the ground and so forth.

So, the volume of water, is the function of time (24hours), the collection area (watershed) and the variables. Just imagine the amount of water that is dropped on the whole Mesa in a rain storm.

A rain gauge reduces the collection area down to a 4-inch diameter with a graduated collection tube. Is it accurate? Yes! But, the amount of rain I collect may be different than what you collect. Location, Location!

stems, stalks and twigs of the tea plant and is naturally low in caffeine. Powdered green tea, such as matcha, is considerably stronger. Water to brew a cup of green tea should be less than boiling temperature, around 150 to 160 degrees F. May all be well on your next trip to the dentist!

WHAT HAPPENED

12-17-18 Monday Morning Recap
Week-in-Review from Jennie Pfeiffer-Riley

No column today. Our household is passing around a very naughty holiday bug so not able to get out this weekend for enjoying the many events of the season. We were able to move forward with a delightful Simone birthday grand daughter gathering of a gaggle of gals and guys, 5, 6,7 year olds, which got the adrenaline going just enough to move through the day on Saturday, then it was a stormy Sunday under the covers, along with a very sick dog who had found several pieces of Princess Cake left within reach, which she ate and later shared with us as they came up in various spots around on the rugs and the couch, and added to the family's general distemper of the day. All are much better today. Many Monday meetings, so POR (press on regardless.)

Hi there,
I have a huge problem my grandma has dementia and her senior dog needs to find a home. I have had him with me for the past week or so and unfortunately with my living situation I can not keep him. I'm seeing if you could put it in the Hearsay? If so here's a description about him

Pierre is about 12-14 years old. He is a little feisty at first and he does get startled very easily and has some aggression. If he's with a mellow quiet zone he's a lot more comfortable. Once he's comfortable he loves to cuddle and sleep a lot.

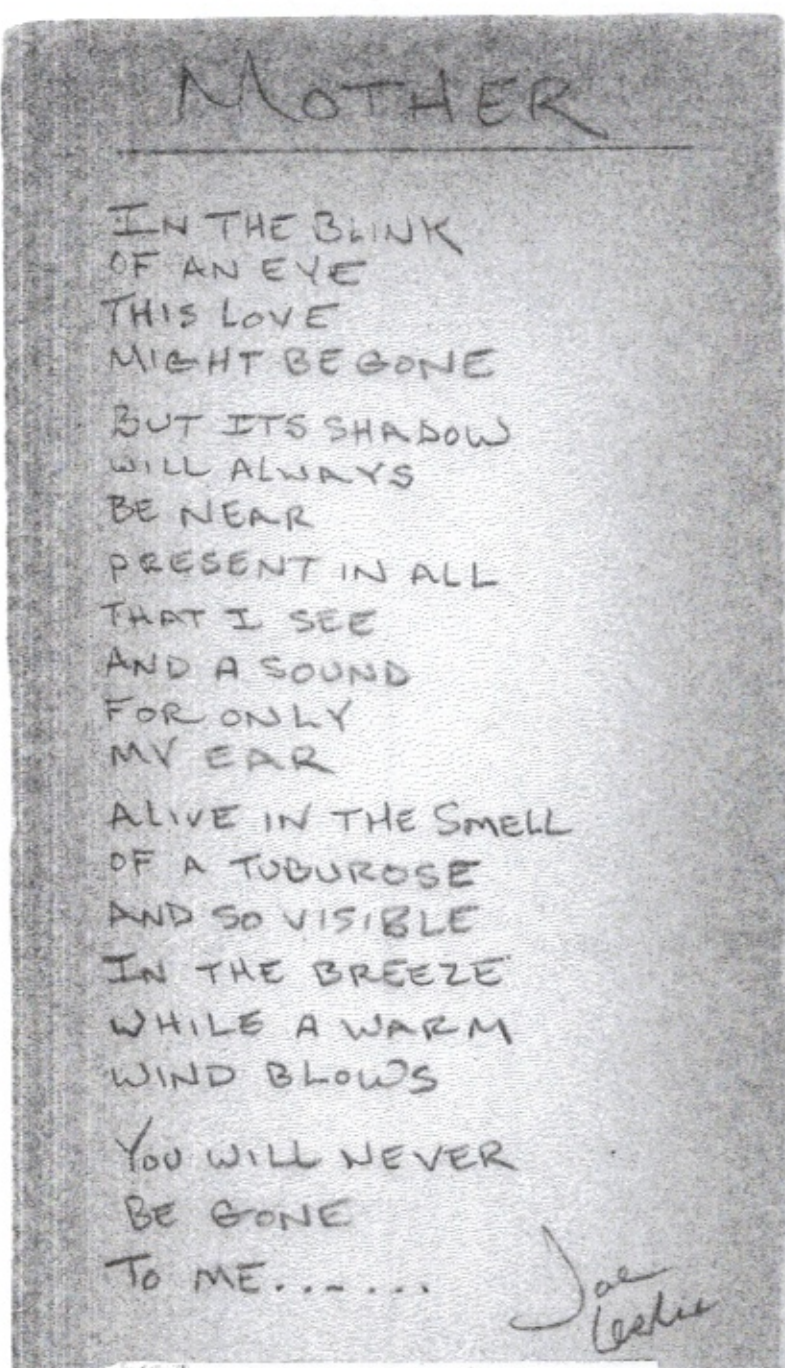

He loves to play with his toys for a few minutes then likes to rest!

He loves to go for little walks and he loves to dig little holes.

He spent most of his days resting with my grandma but sadly she has Dementia and she can't keep him :(I would love to take him but it breaks my heart and i sadly can't because I work too much and my living situation is too much for him he is used to being with my grandma all the time so I would love if someone who is home a lot and is very mellow could love him for the rest of his life!!

If anyone would like to hear more about him please contact me at 415-858-5988

Thank you so much Savannah Rippe

THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- All this seasonal celebration is exhilarating, but it can leave those of us who are not Believers--who in fact are serious skeptics--feeling like imposters. Fortunately there IS a celebration for the rest of us. Sorry Jerry, it's NOT Festivus but...
- The Winter Solstice! For me it's easy to get all mystical, contemplating the long, slow return of solar warmth and light, revivifying the creatures of the earth. I'll light a candle to that: Friday at 2:23pm it begins.
- Michael Pollan. The man is a national treasure. If you need proof, I'll be returning his 'Cooked' to the library this afternoon after the Hearsay is done. Check it out.
