ATTENTION! COMING THIS FRIDAY

On December 7th at 5PM the doors open to our Annual Winter Faire held at the Bolinas Community Center. The Faire continues on Saturday and Sunday beginning at 11AM and going to 6PM. There will be Thai food served from the kitchen all three days. The Hall will be filled with innovative hand crafted items made by our local creative craftsmen and women. I find that a handmade gift is more meaningful to the recipient than a factory made item. So please check the Faire first, before shopping over-the-hill, and save yourself time, energy, gas, frustration and stress.

Magi and I will have the same booth spot that we have had for about 30 years. We will have our best selling Wild Bolinas Blackberry Vinegar (Magi picked each and every luscious blackberry for this). The vinegar is good as a dressing for salads, cooked green veggies and marinade for meats. Dale Johnson takes a tablespoon of the vinegar followed by a half a glass of water every day as a tonic, and has for years, as well as using on other foods. One of our vinegar's four ingredients is Braggs organic apple cider vinegar.

Magi has sewn and filled some handsome lavender pillows in many sizes. Herbalists tell us that lavender is a nervine that enhances sleep and encourages relaxation. Try one on your night pillow.

Our traditional offering of catnip pillows (which I stuffed) is for the delight of one's cat, and they come in many colorful and cute fabrics. Make your kitty ecstatic and slap happy and watch their antics with one of these pillows!

We will also be making and selling our popular Christmas cookies made from a recipe from Barbara Pace. For many years we were the recipients of her delicious cookies, until I finally got the courage to

Dear friends and neighbors,
I am happy to report that Cinnamon, the giant mocha Siamese who went missing after a fox attacked him returned 6 days after Thanksgiving. Grateful to see him, he looks well. The concern was rabies; the Marin Public Health officer explained that it is mainly bats at 10% that are rabid. She said to please have your pets vaccinated every few years. Raccoons, coyote, fox, rats, mice don't usually get it though they can. There are statistics and facts about the virus online. If an animal gets infected it takes 6 to 8 weeks for signs of rabies, then it becomes fatal, also to humans bitten or scratched or in contact with saliva of the infected animal. Be careful and safe. Thanks, Angela

THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- Saturday's square dance at the BCC. The caller, Evie Ladin, is the real deal. The band, too. Good music, good company. Let's do it again, soon.

- 'Next-Door Bolinas'—I have reservations about all the ads (and the impact on the Hearsay) but on balance, it seems to be a force for community.

- The return of Dingus, the famous kidnapped dog, now happily back home. I'm looking forward to giving him a welcome-back pat.

--Ned Riley

ask her for the recipe, which she most graciously gave to me.

Conviviality, camaraderie, re-union, along with Caroling at 7PM with pianist Jennifer Meyer, will all be part of the Friday night festivities at the Winter Faire. So come on down and join in the fun, and support your local craftspersons.

Help the environment by keeping your cell phone! And more

You have read of the new report on climate change from the U.S. government, saying that what the earth is experiencing is unlike anything in the past, that the global average temperature is much higher and is rising more rapidly than anything modern civilization has ever gone through. This warming trend can only be explained by human activity. Our country could lose hundreds of billions of dollars, or more than 10% of its GDP by the end of the century. Rising oceans can flood many coastal cities and towns, including Bolinas. The US Global Change Research Program is a team of 13 federal agencies and was put together by a group of 1,000 people, including 300 leading scientists, roughly half from outside the government.

There are many suggested steps that people can take, and I will list some of them. The first came from a New York Times article this week, concerning cell phones. The problem isn't the power needed to charge your phone (although that can add up) "but the tremendous energy needed to mine 60 plus metals and assemble them into a new device. A 2015 study found that producing an iPhone 6 released the equivalent of 178 pounds of carbon dioxide – about as much as running a modern refrigerator for a year." Most people change cell phones every 2 years. Lofti Belkhir, an entrepreneur and engineering professor at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario, says that cell phone business models promote frequent upgrades while masking the true financial and environmental costs of new phones. His research suggests: hang on to your phone as long as possible. Extend its life by fixing it when things break, cleaning the charging port and swapping out dying batteries. If you must replace your phone, recycle your old one and consider buying a used one. Purchasing fewer new phones will send a message to industry that it needs to change.

Many of us feel there isn't enough we can do as an individual to address climate change. That's why it's important to join with others in effective organizations. 350.org is an international organization founded by environmentalist Bill McKibben of Middlebury College to work on these goals: keep carbon in the ground, build a new and more equitable low carbon economy, and pressure governments into limiting emissions. If you look at 350.org you can get on their mailing list for information.

Be aware that California is joining Hawaii in going carbon-free by 2045 by having all electricity free of fossil fuel origin. This is amazing! Salt Lake City, Atlanta, San Diego,

WHAT HAPPENED

12-3-18 Monday Morning Recap
Week-in-Review from Jennie Pfeiffer-Riley

It was a week about Dingus the Dog, celebrity of the week, making everyone happy by returning to town! What kind of a town has a welcome party at Smiley's for a dog, a dog back in town after disappearing without a trace, leaving family, friends and folks in town bereft and dismayed, heartbroken for 8 long months, until a call came through out of the blue, telling the tale of a lowlife dognapper who nabbed the dog in Bolinas, transported him to San Diego for the indefinite future, whereby there was a miracle, a hero, a good soul with integrity, overheard the nabber bragging about the dog theft, causing Hero to spring into action to liberate the purloined Dingus and contact Family who jumped in the car, drove to So Cal where all were happily reunited before hitting the road back to Bolinas in time for an oh-so-thankful Thanksgiving? A dog-loving town, that's what kind of a town!

And what sort of townsfolk swing a partner round and round, whether it's a 3-year old or a 3 score and ten year old partner, whooping it up to the music of the Old Time Dance Party band playing lively tunes while Evie Ladin calls out instructions on a Saturday night and dancers dos e do and promenade around the hall, square dancing with reckless abandon? Some wild and crazy townsfolk, from towns at their best when dancing, especially to support the Bolinas-Stinson School Foundation at a dinner/dance FUNd-raiser, that's the sort we gotta love.

And what manner of people continue to thankfully and enthusiastically send in corrections, names and numbers and ads for businesses, new and old, to put in the 2019-20, 868+ Phone Directory, in December after the "deadline" was end of October? The West Marin manner of people that's who, and that's why I love this place.

And what sort of person just panicked because we have slipped into day three of the last month of 2018, leaving just 28 days to do all those things on the "needed/wanted to do" list for this year? I am just such a person and I will be sad to see this month go because that leaves very little left of this YEAR OF THE DOG, which is my year, me being a dog and all, so I have been enjoying it and all the good dog things it brought me. And since the day, weeks, months, and years move on apace, ready or not, we must press on regardless. Happy Hanukkah to all, as we rev up the holiday season for real, hoping the call for peace, shalom, carries all the way to our southern borders to hopefully stop the insanity of tear gassing children and their families because that is certainly not the sort of people we want to be, and I say "don't make me come down there!" jp

Pittsburg and Portland have all announced they are going 100% renewable.

Here are other things an individual can do: Drive less, carpool, use a fuel efficient car, take a train or bus rather than a plane whenever possible. Eat less meat – because almost 15% of human induced greenhouse gases come from livestock. Waste less food - buy only what you need and take your own container to a restaurant to wrap up what's left over. Install rooftop or backyard solar panels. Use water carefully, by planting native plants instead of a lawn. You and your state are powerful and you should feel effective in making these moves. Basically they are for your children and grandchildren. If I have left out moves that you feel are important, please let me know on my website and I'll print them in my next column. # Bolinas land trust plans farmworker units on mesa

By Anna Guth

The Bolinas Community Land Trust has scored some prime real estate on the Big Mesa, where it hopes to build up to eight new units of housing for farmworkers. With help from an anonymous donor, the trust this month acquired 20 acres of undeveloped land that border the Bolinas fire station.

The land is part of a nearly 70-acre property ranches by the Tacherra family for the better part of a century. A court-appointed receiver has been in control of that land since 2006, following a lawsuit filed by one brother in the family against another brother over alleged embezzlement.

The receiver, Stinson Beach resident Larry Baskin, made the decision to sell the 20-acre parcel to the land trust to help pay off remaining debts and tax liabilities. A Marin Superior Court judge approved the decision in October.

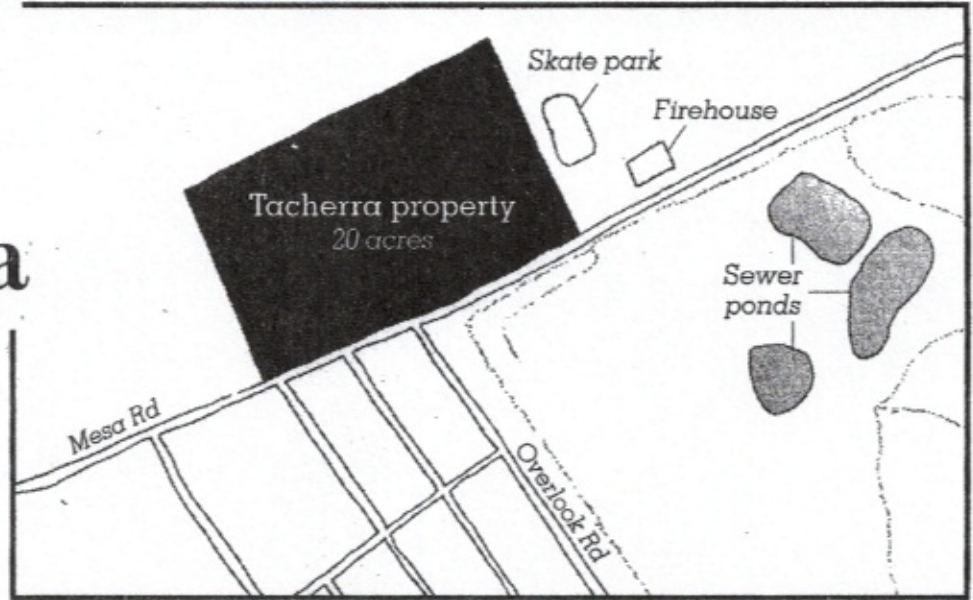

Mr. Baskin said he felt the land trust was uniquely positioned to make good use of the land, which is currently under a Williamson Act contract with the county. The state law provides relief from property taxes in exchange for rolling 10-year agreements to keep the land in agriculture.

"It was my hope that the trust will be able to make some provisions for low-income housing, coming up with something that will work well for the community and the land," Mr. Baskin said.

Mr. Baskin also described the possibility of the trust exiting the Williamson Act contract—which seeks foremost to limit development—to better serve its goal of providing affordable housing. Such a decision would fall under the purview of the Board of Supervisors.

The trust's executive director, Arianne Dar, emphasized that the project was in its early days and that there was much left to figure out.

Ms. Dar first announced the vision to create eight units of agricultural housing on the land in the Bolinas Hearsay News earlier this month. She wrote that such development was a contingency of the anonymous donor's funds. The housing would likely be for local workers, though not necessarily for those whom the Tacherras employ.

"The BCLT had not planned to develop the Tacherra land but [has] been given this rare and exciting opportunity," Ms. Dar wrote. "We hope to garner the support of the entire community and will seek to be as transparent about our process as we can be and intend also to be as communicative about the process as we can be."

Speaking with the Light this month, she explained that the donor covered the cost of the land and will pay for its development. The trust will cover permitting and other pre-development expenses, for which Ms. Dar expects help from both the county and the Marin Community Foundation. Under the agreement with the donor, the trust has 18 months to complete the permitting process.

In the interim, Ms. Dar said Jim and Susan Tacherra, who live on the neighboring land and raise chickens, pigs and cattle, will continue to use the 20 acres for grazing. She also outlined the possibility that the couple would use the land even after the housing is built. (The Tacherras could not be reached for this story.)

Although the trust has widespread community support, it met some local opposition last summer after it announced plans to create low-income housing on two other properties on the Big Mesa.

A group of neighbors who called themselves MUSSEL—for Mesa United in Support of Solutions for Equitable Land use—expressed concerns about increased density and compliance with county development rules. They worried over the effects of more residents on the natural habitat, traffic congestion, water use, septic load, noise and more.

Polly Levin, who lives on Overlook and is a member of MUSSEL, has voiced her concerns. Ms. Levin describes herself as very supportive of housing for agricultural workers and affordable housing in general. But in her view, converting existing properties is far more preferable than new development. If the land trust is to undertake new construction, she emphasized the importance of doing so on land that is not suitable for other uses, such as agriculture or conservation.

Regarding the new project, she explained her concern about creating eight units tied to one water meter, which is all that is available for the 20 acres. "I think the for-profit developers are waiting in the wings," she said. "What kind of precedent is this setting to break the water moratorium in Bolinas?"

Jennifer Blackman, the general manager of the Bolinas Community Public Utility District, has not been in contact with the trust about the plans, but said the general procedure is for developers to obtain county permits first. "Any project to develop the property that requires a water meter will be subject to our district's rules and regulations," Ms. Blackman assured.

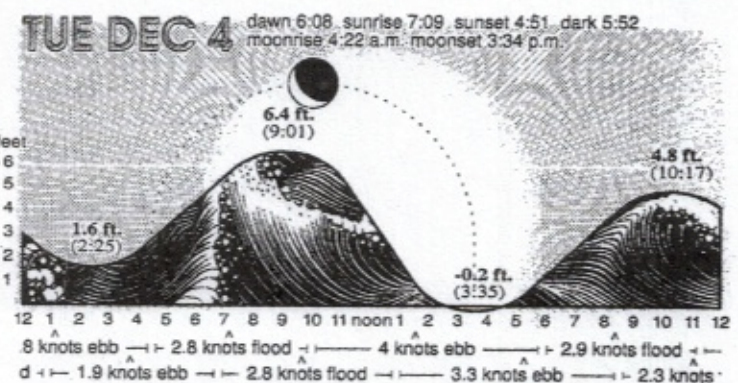

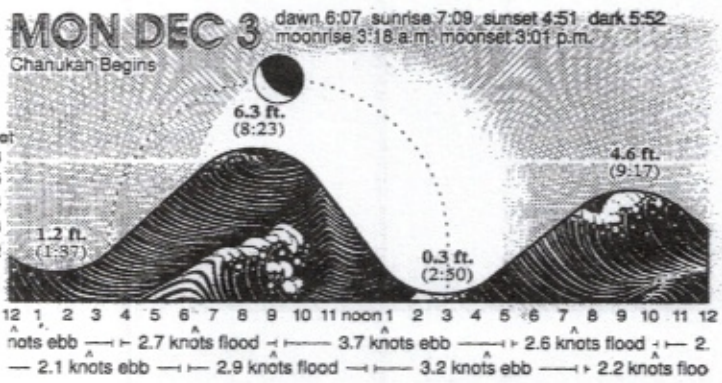

She added that it is not uncommon for one connection to serve multiple users.

She pointed to the fact that the BC-PUD adopted new policies last spring that streamlined the district's approach to imposing water usage limits on connections, including how to address the biggest users and connections that have been out of commission while still honoring the water moratorium put in place in the early '70s.
