That Good Night: On Dignity, Suffering, and the Role of Medicine in Life's Eleventh Hour

~Part of the End-of-Life Conversations Series~
~Co-presented with the Mesa Refute and Point Reyes Books

Join TNS Host Steve Heilig in conversation with physician, author, and medical ethicist Sunita Puri in the next in our End-of-Life Conversations series. In her new book, That Good Night: Life and Medicine in the Eleventh Hour, she weaves evocative stories of her family and the patients she cares for in a meditation on impermanence and the role of medicine in helping us to live and die well. Kirkus Reviews magazine calls her book, "A profound meditation on a problem many of us will face; worthy of being mentioned in the same breath as Atul Gawande's Being Mortal."

WHAT HAPPENED

Intermittent Monday Morning Recap
From Jenniepfeiffer 3-11-19

This is short bit of an update on some school news. Friday, there was a special meeting of the Bolinas-Stinson Union School District Board of Trustees. The reason for the meeting was to determine what configuration of classes there will be for the 86 students scheduled to be in the K-8th program next school year. There were 4 options. The option that three out of the four Board members in attendance voted to approve was option 4, which would place a certificated teacher in every grade level at the school and would increase our classroom teaching staff by two over what we presently have, although we are missing one teacher who left earlier this year (we have yet to replace this teacher). This decision means we would have 9 classroom teachers for 86 students. Two of these classes, third and fourth grades, have 6 students each.

This decision means there will be required budget adjustments (read cuts) to accommodate the additional approximately $100,000 a year for the new hire. We are presently, with the staff we have now, in deficit spending. There will be a comprehensive budget report at tomorrow's regular monthly School Board meeting. I would suggest that anyone who is interested in how this configuration decision, and the shifting of funds that will be required to accommodate it, will affect our overall school program, come to Tuesday's 5:00pm meeting to weigh in on how you would like to see our school move forward in the future. jp

New and Important News on Sleep

Researchers at Bar-Ilan University in Israel have identified a function of sleep that can explain why humans as well as all other animals with a nervous system spend a significant portion of their lives in sleep. Even Invertebrates such as flies, worms and jellyfish sleep. The reason why animals sleep – despite the threat of predators, has been considered one of the biggest questions in life sciences.

In a new study, published in March, 2019 in the journal Nature Communications, researchers at Bar-Ilan University in Israel reveal a novel and unexpected function of sleep that they believe could explain how sleep and sleep disturbances affect brain performance, aging and various brain disorders.

Using 3D time-lapse imaging techniques in live zebrafish, the researchers were able to define sleep in a single chromosome resolution and show, for the first time, that single neurons require sleep in order to perform nuclear maintenance. DNA damage can be caused by many processes including radiation, oxidative stress, and even neuronal activity. DNA repair systems within each cell correct this damage. The current work shows that during wakefulness, when chromosome dynamics are low, DNA damage consistently accumulates and can reach unsafe levels.

The role of sleep is to increase chromosome dynamics, and normalize the levels of DNA damage in each single neuron. Apparently, this DNA maintenance process is not efficient enough during the online wakefulness period and requires an offline sleep period with reduced input to the brain in order to occur. "It's like potholes in the road," says Prof. Lior Appelbaum of Bar-Ilan University. "Roads accumulate wear and tear, especially during daytime rush hours, and it is most convenient and efficient to fix them at night, when there is light traffic."

Appelbaum calls the accumulation of DNA damage the "price of wakefulness." He and his doctoral student David Zada, first author of the study, as well as co-authors, Dr. Tali Lerer-Goldshtein, Dr. Irina Bronshtein, and Prof. Yuval Garini, hypothesized that sleep consolidates and synchronizes nuclear maintenance within individual neurons, and set out to confirm this theory.

Their discovery was achieved thanks to the characteristics of the zebrafish model. With their absolute transparency, and a brain very similar to humans, zebrafish are a perfect organism in which to study a single cell within a live animal under physiological conditions. Using a high-resolution microscope, the movement of DNA and nuclear proteins within the cell -- inside the fish -- can be observed while the fish are awake and asleep. The researchers were particularly surprised to find that chromosomes are more active at night, when the body rests, but this increased activity enables the efficiency of the repair to DNA damage.

The results establish chromosome dynamics as a potential marker for defining single sleeping cells and propose that the restorative function of sleep is nuclear maintenance. "We've found a causal link between sleep, chromosome dynamics, neuronal activity, and DNA damage and repair with direct physiological relevance to the entire organism," says Prof. Appelbaum. "Sleep gives an opportunity to reduce DNA damage accumulated in the brain during wakefulness." "Despite the risk of reduced awareness to the environment, animals -- ranging from jellyfish to zebrafish to humans -- have to sleep to allow their neurons to perform efficient DNA maintenance, and this is possibly the reason why sleep has evolved and is so conserved in the animal kingdom."

The take-home message of this column is that we should find a way to sleep every night until we feel refreshed and rested. We can't put it off until the weekend and get the daily needed brain repair. Going to bed earlier could be an answer for many people. Zzzzzzzz

CONFIRMATION BIAS

Diana says - I need some distraction from the interaction

So what about the woman who sleeps on the floor of the post office
Gentle Jim in the surf shed
The guy who can't keep his pants up or budget his dole?

Senator Mitchell, you have become beside the point with your talking points
Yes, this is happening right now
Right here

Here Hear

See something, say something

Diana of the naughty daughters

Sexual assault yeah it happens
Sometimes
Somewhere

But not on the floor of the Senate
The floor of the cloakroom or the Post office
The dark of the woods
The glare of the beach

They call it confirmation bias
See what you expect
Hear what you are predisposed to hear
Speak the truth you want to believe

The fact is there are more than three monkeys – explains Diana to her strangely quiet daughters
