Bolinas-Stinson Youth Group

Hooray sixth graders returned! Fantastic to have Jasmine and Julia, we missed you!

We were competing with "Math with Don" after school on Mondays. Seventh graders still in Utah, but Ruby, Kyla and July rounded out our stellar crew. Eight graders are making their ceremonial bench and preparations for their trip to Ashland and then graduation! Gulp. We had a stack of frisbees this week and had tons of fun expressing our gratitude for where we live and our friends by creating tossing challenges and trekking all down the Stinson Beach park making up frisbee golf goals. After one disc landed deep in impenetrable thick scrub, we teamed together, and found a huge heavy stick with a hook on the end. Jasmine bushwhacked, Julia encouraged, and our little flier that we had almost dismissed was miraculously balanced on the end of a branch and lifted back to life. The girls finished their math homework to join everyone outside for a survival bracelet making party. Ruby even made one for her little brother. Goodbyes to Kerry were expressed as we will be celebrating Memorial Day next week. We retreated out of the cool wind with generous Parkside Pizza, sharing what our opinion of the most sought after superhero qualities on the planet were. "Invisibility", "shape shifting", "time travel" were top picks, but "flying" was our unanimous first choice. We then shared deep experiences in dream time, nightmares, lucid dreams, deja vu. There was even an incident where someone was sleepwalking, speaking Spanish and yet in their waking life, they don't actually know Spanish! That council set the stage for watching part of Guardians of the Galaxy. The Den was quite chilly and when it was time to catch the Stage, everyone had to extract themselves from a big cozy puppy pile. And there was such ample daylight to accompany us home around the lagoon.

A perfectly timed escape. A getaway without getting too far away. A few hours outside of the city to reconnect to what's important. We'll start the day with a group hike or trail run close to Bolinas. Any one is welcome, whether a runner or not. I will have several different options for lengths and speeds so that everyone feels comfortable. We will stay together as much as possible. After the run, we will head into Bolinas. There will be time to rest and have a snack and then we will have an hour long yoga class. You can expect the class to be challenging but relaxing. A blend of vinyasa flow with some restorative poses, class will be designed especially with runners in mind. We'll breath, we'll sweat, we'll move; that's what this day is all about. We will end our day with a deliciously prepared vegetarian lunch. The entire day is open to all levels of yogis and runners!

THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- (1) The 'Golden Bell' awards last Thursday at Dominican College, for Marin County's best teachers and administrators. (Laurie Riley received her second, in her retirement year.)
- (2) 'This Old Earthquake' rocking out Smiley's on Saturday—great musicians really listening to each other.
- (3) Memorial Day festivities. Except for the glorification of 'fallen warriors.' I'm really glad I didn't become one of them.

MONDAY MORNING WEEK IN REVIEW 5/25/15 Wrap and Recap from Jenniepfeiffer

Today is Memorial Day, a time to remember the efforts of those who are no longer with us in this life. It is a day dedicated particularly for our war dead, and it is unfortunate that there are so many good souls who have died fighting some concept of "right", that it is impossible to remember them all, so we do a day of collective remembering when we can say thank you to them -- although hard to say exactly what that's about. Are we saying thanks for freedom? But freedom from one sort of oppression seems to lead to another, and on it goes. War is a concept that doesn't seem to be working for most of humanity. I guess it's good for the arms industry, for mercenaries, for the wealthy and powerful who want to be wealthier and more powerful, and for those who wish to wipe out all those who don't agree with their religious beliefs or ideas. I'm sorry so many of our young and strong had to die for those individuals. I think it's time we find another way to restore justice. There are many who have dedicated their lives for such a paradigm shift. Russell Faure-Brac was such a warrior for peace. He was a long time Dog Town resident, former defense engineer who spent the last trimester of his life teaching how to transition to peace. Thank you Russ for all your good work. We will miss you.

Another peaceful community member died recently. Scott Harwood was waging his personal war with himself, but was always kind to his fellow travelers and kept his sense of humor to the end. I am remembering him on this day also. Scott knew every hot springs in the state and kept maps showing how to get there. I thank him for all the conversations, and his help with the Garagemahal. I miss these two friends and wish them peaceful journeys.

All best love to those who have lost cherished ones fighting for a better world. Maybe one day we can stop the fighting. JP

Mosquito tax fails on weighted system

By Beau Evans

A vote on an assessment tax proposed by the lone district in charge of wrangling mosquito populations in West Marin—the Marin/Sonoma Mosquito and Vector Control District—failed last week by a very narrow margin. The district was aiming to raise around $3.5 million, over half of which would have gone into a trust fund to pay for “other post-employment benefits,” which last year cut into the district’s reserves by $924,219.

Without the assessment revenue, the district will have to tighten its pocketbook before a final budget can be adopted on June 10. Some trimming may have to be done through layoffs, such as one unnamed position the district has already slated for the chopping block.

tell what effect the failed assessment will have on services,” said Phil Smith, the district’s manager. “We certainly plan to offer the highest level of services possible, given the limited funds available.”

Prior to the April 15 mail-in election, the proposed assessment’s $12 fee—to be tacked on to the roughly $22 that property owners in the district already pay—was a charge that many officials believed would be small enough not to elicit public outcry. Others, however, including trustee Frank Egger, viewed it as asking too much from taxed-out property owners.

“We thought [staff] were asking for too much money, too soon,” said Mr. Egger, Fairfax’s representative and one of two trustees opposed to the tax from the start. “We weren’t really sure where that money was going to go.”

Weighted votes

District officials this week appeared frustrated by the election system that caused the vote to fail. By the official tally, a heavier “weighted” percentage of votes was cast in opposition to the assessment, 51.25 percent, while 48.75 percent of votes were in favor. However, the actual number of “yes” votes, in total, exceeded the number of “no” votes by a count of 35,308 to 31,358. A section of California state law called the “Right to Vote on Taxes Act”—or more commonly known as Proposition 218—states that under certain conditions, “no” votes may carry a heavier “weight” than “yes” votes for elections on assessments.

The benefits of an assessment are twofold: the local agency that levies the fee receives revenue from the property owner, who in turn receives a higher assessed property value from that agency’s services.

Passed in 1996, Prop 218 was meant to set tougher rules on special taxes like assessments, which local government agencies had been imposing unchecked through legal loopholes in the state’s constitution.

By nature, special benefits assessments are a means to confer added value and desirability to an assessed property through what’s called “special services,” such as those the mosquito district provides—fewer pesky bugs in a neighborhood.

Last year, the mosquito district elected to propose the tax as a special benefits assessment rather than as a general “ad valorem levy,” which would have required only a two-thirds majority vote (not under the weighted system).

Under Prop 218, each parcel carries one vote, but heavier weight is given to votes cast by owners of parcels estimated to have a higher value than others in the district. The added value conferred on a parcel by an assessment, according to Prop 218, is to be estimated and published in an engineering report prior to any election.

In 2014, the district hired Fairfield-based SCI Consulting Group to draft an engineering report for the assessment in order to determine a formula for calculating which parcels in the district should receive a higher assessment and heavier weighted vote than others. That report, however, did not elaborate on a parcel-by-parcel basis, leaving many in the district to wonder where the weighted “no” votes originated.
