What Happened
Monday Morning Week in Review
6-4-18

What happened was we slipped into June. We're halfway through the calendar year, almost completely through the school year, and heavily into the summer season. Time for me to stop stressing over all the New Year's greeting cards I didn't get in the mail yet.

Primary elections are tomorrow. Voting is important and if you want to do something about things you've been complaining about, this is the time to let your voice be heard and hope the voting process hasn't been completely subverted. Technology can be our friend and our enemy at the same time and today I'm seeing how fast it can turn on you if you don't pay close attention. I am typing this on an iPad because my laptop has been compromised, perhaps infected with some malware virus, so the tech trust has been broken for me. FYI, if you get a warning out of the blue that your computer is being hacked and infected and you must call the provided number for emergency technical assistance, don't do it! Call a tech pro you know. Trust your gut and if something gives you a nervous stomach, don't proceed, but follow your instincts. This is particularly true with elections. I am voting by mail-in ballot, which I will drop off at the Community Center polling site, and I will be choosing people I trust because I know them or they have been, recommended by people/groups I trust.

Bottom line is that if you're concerned about children being killed with rapid fire guns, children being pulled from parents by arbitrarily enforced immigration laws written by racists, children being denied adequate affordable healthcare, children being denied equal opportunity for quality education, children living in poverty without adequate food and housing, then it's important to vote for people who put our children ahead of financial enhancement. People who put equal protection and opportunity for all citizens, no matter race, religion, gender or non-conforming gender, national origin, age, or any extenuating physical or mental circumstance of birth or accident, above the almighty dollar are to be championed and supported. If I don't have personal knowledge of a candidate, I usually listen to the unions - farmers, factory/service workers, teachers, emergency responders, and particularly nurses because they are usually out in force speaking up for the health of people and the home planet.

BCLT

*I went to the Bolinas Community Land Trust Board meeting yesterday. I was so impressed with all the hard, meticulous, and complicated work they are doing to create low-cost housing in Bolinas. You can support them by joining the BCLT with the annual $10.00 membership fee and attending their Board meetings. So far they have 171 members from the community. Thank you so much to the Board.

THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- It's June, and I LOVE JUNE! Especially when the wind doesn't blow.
- Ben Pfeiffer. What a fine man and what a great single Dad. His birthday is Sunday. Please wish him well.
- The Solano Avenue area of Albany—we were over there Saturday and enjoyed its very European feel. Great strolling place.

How to vote on the June 5 ballot

ENDORSEMENTS BY WADE HOLLAND

My favorite part of the California voter information guide is the candidate statements. Each candidate for state office can buy a half-page to present his or her platform. It's not cheap to buy the space, but most candidates do so. Yet I'm amazed that some people who fork out the bucks have so little to say. For example, one Republican gubernatorial candidate's campaign statement consists solely of the hashtag "#cesp5."

I'm also intrigued by how obsessively focused some office-seekers are on a single issue. One candidate for U.S. Senate uses his entire half-page expounding on the topic "There is no such thing as 'transgender.' It does not exist." A refreshingly different (if punctuation-challenged) statement was provided by a Green party candidate for governor: "Teach your children calculus And keep the planet safe Or feathered stones and empty bowls also be their fate." (Google it.)

My favorite statement for why we should support a candidate was provided by Johnny Wattenburg, also running for governor. His statement reads simply, "Why not!"

Moving on to voting recommendations for the June 5 primary, the two most viable candidates for governor are Gavin Newsom and Antonio Villaraigosa. The latter has sold out to libertarian-tainted charter school stridents in exchange for gobs of campaign cash, so my vote goes to Kentfield resident Newsom (although I do also like John Chiang). For lieutenant governor, it's close to a tossup between Jeff Bleich and Ed Hernandez, but I give a slight edge to Bleich.

Running for re-election are Alex Padilla for secretary of state and Betty Yee for controller. Vote for them. I can't say the same for Xavier Becerra, who was appointed attorney general in 2016 and is now running for a full term. The problem here is that his principal opponent, Dave Jones, currently the insurance commissioner, would be better. The two men are in lock step on the issues, but Becerra tends to grandstand a lot, while Jones is more the roll-up-your-sleeves type who will focus better on the details of the office and ensure that goals are actually accomplished, not just rolled out for sound-bite press conferences.

For treasurer, I'm quite comfortable with Fiona Ma, but I'm also impressed by earnest, young Vivek Viswanathan and especially his "10 ideas," which you can check out on his website). I endorse Malia Cohen for State Board of Equalization.

The front-runner for insurance commissioner is Ricardo Lara, but I'm not sure why when I dive into his website. He barely mentions anything about the office for which he is running, and I wonder if he regards it simply as a stepping stone to a future higher-profile office. In contrast, Mahmood Asif's website addresses many important issues relevant directly to the California Department of Insurance. Asif is the better choice (but avoid Steve Poizner, who took some pretty nasty positions when he ran for governor as a Republican a few years back).

Diarine Feinstein and Jared Huffman get the nod for U.S. Senator and Congressman, respectively.

For our legislators in Sacramento, I'm impressed by the job the energetic Mike McGuire has been doing as our state senator. For the Assembly, I'm happy to find in San Anselmo's Dan Monte a promising alternative to incumbent Marc Levine, who has a habit of picking really weird causes to waste his legislative energies on.

Lastly at the state level, vote for Tony Thurmond for superintendent of public instruction. I urge you not to take a chance on Marshall Tuck's supposed conversion to strong supporter of public schools. He's got a long background of flag waving on behalf of charter school initiatives, and I worry that putting him in charge of California's public school system makes as much sense as naming Betsy DeVos to head up the U.S. Department of Education.

Turning to Marin County offices, I'm planning to cast my ballot for Matt Nagle for county superintendent of schools. His continued on p 5

Would increase the town's sales tax from a half-cent to three-quarters cent and eliminate a flood-control property tax.
- San Rafael cannabis tax Measure G: Yes
Would impose a gross receipts tax on licensed commercial medical cannabis businesses.
- Stinson Beach Water District Measure H: Yes
Would keep local property tax revenue for local needs for another four years.

State/congressional candidates

- Congress: Jared Huffman
- State Assembly: Marc Levine
- State Senate: Mike McGuire

State/federal offices

- U.S. Senate: Dianne Feinstein
- Governor: Gavin Newsom
- Lt. Governor: Jeff Bleich
- Attorney General: Xavier Becerra
- Insurance Commissioner: Steve Poizner
- Secretary of State: Alex Padilla
- Supt. of Public Instruction: Marshall Tuck
- Treasurer: Fiona Ma
- State Controller: Betty Yee

State propositions

- Proposition 68: Yes
Would approve a $4.1 billion bond measure for state parks, water and natural resources.
 - Proposition 69: Yes
Would ensure that state gas tax revenue is used for transportation improvements.
 - Proposition 70: No
Would establish a 2024 review and approval of the state's cap-and-trade law regulating greenhouse gas pollution.
 - Proposition 71: Yes
Would establish a constitutional amendment for when ballot propositions take effect.
 - Proposition 72: Yes
Would exclude property tax reassessments for homeowners who install systems to capture rainwater.

chances of winning are indeed slight, but the outstanding job he's done as principal of West Marin and Inverness Schools deserves to be recognized locally. Also, votes for Matt might send a message to Shoreline Union School District's bureaucracy and trustees that we support him and we insist that he is still at the principal's desk in the fall.

My choice for assessor-recorder-clerk is Shelly Scott, whom I've endorsed in the past and who is the candidate with by far the most experience in this office's multifold functions. For district attorney, all three candidates appear to be well qualified, but an important distinction is that only one of them supports bail reform. That's Anna Pletcher, so she gets the nod from me.

On the state propositions, I am in favor of four of them—Prop. 68 for bonds for environmental protection projects, Prop. 69 to insure that transportation revenues get spent for transportation purposes, Prop. 71 that says that ballot measures don't go into effect until all the ballots have been counted and the election certified, and Prop. 72 that protects the installation of rain-capture systems from triggering a Prop. 13 property tax reassessment.

That leaves the enigmatic Prop. 70. A

I see no reason why greenhouse gas reduction projects should be held hostage to a two-thirds vote requirement, so I urge No on Prop. 70.
