THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- Nasturtiums. It's been an especially good year for them—put those hot-orange blossoms in your salad for a nice peppery pickup.
- A couple of very hot days. I love it. MsSkitty (the bichon)—not so much. Ah, Sunday brunch on the patio.
- Ben Pfeiffer—what a mench. Give him a birthday hug today.

Magnificent Trees Should Not Go Down the Drain

This article is taken from a report by the Natural Resources Defense Council. (NRDC).

Below the Arctic Circle, the largest intact old growth forest rings the globe. Canada's share of this boreal forest is vast. It is a dense mix of spruce and fir trees mixed with aspen and birch, with peat bogs and verdant wetlands. More than 3 billion birds migrate there to breed – whooping cranes, the great gray owl, and a majority of North American songbirds. Year-round residents include the Canada lynx, moose, pine marten and woodland caribou, as well as more than 600 communities of indigenous people who have relied on the forest's bounty for millennia.

Canada's boreal forest is being leveled at an alarming rate – a million acres a year. The oil and gas industries have added to the destruction, but the greatest threat is from logging, driven in large part by the rapacious demand in the U.S., the destination of more than 3/4ths of all boreal wood products. The wood ends up as lumber, packaging and throwaway tissue products like paper towels and toilet tissue. No major brand of toilet paper, facial tissue or paper towels, such as Procter & Gamble, Kimberly-Clark or Georgia-Pacific contains any recycled content. A recent paper by Shelley Vinyard at the NRDC, entitled The Issue with Tissue: How Americans are Flushing Forests Down the Toilet was followed by a call to action targeting Procter & Gamble, maker of Charmin, the top selling brand of toilet paper in the U.S. More than 80,000 NRDC members and online activists wrote to the Procter & Gamble's CEO.

The NRDC has evaluated several brands of paper products that are sustainable: Green Forest, 365 Bath Tissue, Natural Value Earth First, Seventh Generation, and Trader Joe's Bath Tissue. Note that 365 Sustainably Soft and Trader Joe's Super Soft Bath Tissue do not make the grade as sustainable.

Another critical threat to the forest's survival is the extraction of tar sands oil, which levels the forest and transforms the denuded earth into an industrial area of strip mines and toxic tailings pits. The NRDC and its allies have fought to stop three quarters of the dozen tar sands pipelines the industry proposed, and continue to fight the Keystone XL pipeline.

Worldwide, boreal forests store more carbon per hectare than any other forest biome, making them one of the best natural defenses against climate change. Mandy Gull, deputy grand chief of the Cree Nation, says: As Indigenous peoples in the boreal forest, we live on the food from our land. The forest is our supermarket, with aisles of

What happened: 6-10-19 Jennipeffer's Monday Morning Recap

It was an action-packed week with most all of it sunny and warm, an unusual pattern for us. Usually we get three or four days and then the fog cools us down again. I see some high clouds forming, (along with some smoke from the Sand Fire, blowing in from Clearlake, where they are suffering yet another fire fright -- so early this year), so don't get too used to feeling like we live in Southern Cal or Hawaii.

Today brings us to June 10, a propitious day celebrating the birth of Benjamin Austin Pfeiffer, a kind, loving and humorous person who is also an outstanding woodworker and base player, and happens to be my son. I am taking this opportunity to wish him a happy birthday and hopes for all good things to come his way. He is as excellent a dad as he is a son, and I hope he continues to find the same joy and delight as a parent that I have had the pleasure to experience with him (other than a few tricky age-appropriate teen years.)

There was a big loss this week on the music scene, as Rock and Roll Hall of Fame pianist, singer, songwriter and guitarist, Best of The Beat Lifetime Achievement winner, Mac Rebennack—Dr. John—died on June 6th. Dr. John was one of the New Orleans greats, with driving rhythms and "greegree" (gris-gris) music. As Offbeat Magazine put it: "As a Rock N Roll Hall of Fame inductee, six time Grammy winner, songwriter, composer, producer, and performer, he created a unique blend of music which carried his home town, New Orleans, at its heart, as it was always in his heart." Sad to see him go.

There was a local departure also, I'm sorry to report. The sad passing this week of longtime Bolinas resident, Bill Lyons, was sad news to hear. Bill had suffered a mishap many years ago that left him wheelchair bound, but that did not hold him back from being out and about, continuing to swim, drive, and maintain his independent lifestyle. Sending love and condolences to family and friends. There will be an upcoming celebration of his life, time and place still to be determined. It's tough to lose another community member with such longevity.

In a more here-and -now and ongoing life-moving-forward sort of way, the week held many school events. The 8th graders had their annual trip to Ashland Shakespeare Festival; the Stinson Campus primary grades had their end-of-year over-night campout at the Stinson site, overlooking the Bolinas Lagoon; the intermediate grades had their overnight at the Bolinas Campus by the campfire pit and outside eating area; Bolinas Community After School Theater, BCAST presented Bugsy Malone with 25 enthusiastic young thespians sharing the BCC stage, character parts, songs, and mustaches, as the ongoing sight gag of drooping, dropping, off-target fake mustaches was an hilarious bit of business that, whether intended or not, brought a lot of laughs. All the players, pre-school to middle-school ages, did an amazing job remembering massive amounts of dialog, staging, and costume changes, and young Rain Pinkham Hines did an absolutely awesome job on the piano accompaniment. Music, sets, props, lighting and sound were all great, and the many parent and community volunteers are to be congratulated. Special kudos go out to Lisa Townsend: master-mind, director, script up-dater, holder of so many pieces of the production that I'm surprised her head didn't explode. She has a way of making it all possible for the kids, and any slip-up gets incorporated into the performance without a hitch which takes the scary out of and puts the fun in to being on stage. She was ably assisted by BCAST alumni, Lucian Patton, her son and Assistant Director; Mark Harmon, lights; and Hattie Pohlman & Kai Cunha on sound. Lisa has trained them all very well.

Tuesday's School Board of Trustees meeting was back on track, with apologies for any ruffled feathers, unkind comments, or mismanaged manners of the previous meeting. Things are on target for a final week this week with Wednesday's 7/8 grade dance, and Thursday's 11:00am graduation ceremonies. Looks like 2019-20 will be an outstanding year with the fresh line-up of new exemplary teachers, working with experienced staff in a team teaching approach that will be ever-so competently covering all the educational areas necessary to help our students have the skill set necessary to matriculate to high school and beyond, becoming life-long learners and engaged citizens.

Thursday's Commonweal Resilience Gathering was an amazing conference of scientists, humanitarians, philosophers, and concerned citizens of the planet. With the title question "Can we avoid civilizational collapse?" I took my folding stool with me because I figured any workshop regarding the collapse of civilization would probably have a standing room only turnout, but it was not needed as there was plenty of room. I guess there are not as many people stressing over this as I. The presentations were stellar and not as depressing as one might imagine given the title. For me the upbeat take-away was that there are many working on this as we attempt, in a multi-species way, to stay focused, start with gratitude, hold on to active hope, work in community with widening circles, keep food production on a small farm level, and work to scale down mega-businesses in every area - farming, housing, health, politics. It reminded me of gatherings from back in the day, realizing that it's important to keep it all local, because pretty much everything gets back to the local. POR jp
