RED Vienna / Vienna GOLD

A chamber concert for instrumentalists, singers, and dancers. The period of 1919-1934 is referred to as Red Vienna, a time when a democratically elected Socialist government improved the lives of a majority of its citizens, without diminishing the quality of life of the elite.
The great tradition of high art was continued by Franz Lehar, Anton Webern, Fritz Kreisler, Alban Berg and Eric Wolfgang Korngold, while a new style of serious music meant to reach the masses was furthered by Hanns Eisler and Wilhelm Grosz.

WHAT HAPPENED

6-11-18 Monday Morning Recap
Week in Review from Jennie Pfeiffer

What happened was that Monday, June 11, came too quickly after Monday, June 4th. There should be another week in there between those Mondays because we went from early June to mid June too quickly and too many things happened. I was barely able to keep up with family, what with lots of birthdays, but then there were so many community events and school meetings and art openings, (check out the drawings in the post office from the "budding" artists in Molly Brown's botanical drawing class, and also the latest work of Rob Setrakian, with guest Sooze Mills, at the Farmstand), that it puts the head to spinning.

Loved the "for no particular reason" (other than fun), $5 a plate special pancake breakfast at the Rod and Boat Club, with Anna Gade organizing and supervising all the super volunteers generously giving their time and skills -- a big "thank you" to all of them for that. It was a beautiful day, a happy way to start the Ben Pfeiffer birthday, eating out in the sunshine on the deck, visiting with friends, watching the birds and boats bobbing in the water around us. We ended the day much the same way, across the Bay, also by the water, adding a couple more family birthday celebrants and ending the afternoon watching the sun set as we played a little music out on the deck at Chevy's Tex Mex in Emeryville, a middle meeting place for dinner for the 18 or so extended family members who came from around the Bay Area.

It was a big week for happenings at school. Monday we had a School Board Retreat, a way to say "three hour daytime meeting" that makes it seem relaxing, and I must say that Johanna Scutt does work to make it more pleasant by adding refreshments, but there's no way to make the library chairs more comfortable or the potential for contentious differing opinions less stressful. Good thing it's all people of good humor and intent, all willing to press on regardless. And if that wasn't enough fun, Tuesday (hope everyone voted Tuesday and that your candidate and issues did well) night we were back at it with our regular monthly school Board meeting. Here is the good news: we have hired some enthusiastic new personnel who are well recommended and so far well received. Our new principal is Michelle Stephens, who will be around for introductions this week and also the last School Board meeting of the year, June 19. The new 7/8 grade history and language arts instructor, Gohar Yervandyan, (taking the middle school spot left open as Willow starts working with the 5/6), will also be available for introductions the next couple of weeks.

School site Council had the final meeting of their very productive year, on Thursday, and they are to be congratulated for working diligently on a "Young Stewards of the Land" program in cooperation with University of San Francisco, (the new neighbors that bought Star Route Farm last year), that is now set to be put in place next fall.
This sounds like an excellent opportunity for our students.
Thanks also to Melinda Stone, for spearheading this effort.

Coming up Thursday, 11:00 a.m. is our 8th Grade Graduation. It is always a moving event and a wonderful way for the communities of Stinson and Bolinas to come together to congratulate these students as they say farewell to their early school years, and prepare for the next chapter in their educational lives. Wishing them all well. jp

MUSINGS ON A FARM

In a little town
Tucked between the Pacific and its fault
Is a farm that transcends
The passage of time

Where footsteps unveil artifacts
And create more to be discovered.

The bounty of the land
Much richer than the minerals in the soil
Or the produce bursting from it The stories to be told Far more valuable Than the acreage it is worth,
Than any product conceived or found.

This place lies in a special nook Timelessly transcribed through the decades Matching the times with every turn A village
A racetrack
A ranch
A farm...
And then?

What is to come
Is contained within the figments
Of imaginations.
All that is known is that the things left behind
Will be rediscovered in time
Just like the arrowheads
And rumors of cowboys in California.

The people are the minerals
The stories engrained in the microbial organisms Waiting to be unearthed Through the footsteps of the future.

"Behind the Bolinas School there were open fields where the sheep were grazing. When the bell rang to send the kids in after recess or lunch, the sheep would hear it and come drifting in close to the school. They kept the lawn mowed for us. When the kids went out, so did the sheep, so the bells created an ebb and flow of sheep and children."

FURTHER INVESTIGATIONS NEEDED

1. Study 10 acre wetlands parcel, read farm records to understand what has been grown there and how land/water there has changed throughout 40 years of farming, open up discussion about possible restoration projects, compare contiguous wetlands on north and south of site.
2. Find out more about diking of Pine Gulch Creek that took place in the early 1900s. Connect with agencies and individuals who monitor/study salmon and trout populations on Pine Gulch Creek.
3. Interview local bird experts, including Keith Hansen and staff at Point Blue Observatory, about bird habitat.
4. Interview local poets and artists, who have helped in the fields over the years, and collect any stories, poems, writing and art drawings related to the land.
5. Interview current farmworkers, Miriam Weber, Dewey Livingston, Orville Schell, Bill Niman, Phyllis Faber, Jim Tacherra.
6. More research in to Miwok artifacts found at Star Route Farms. Work with administration to ensure artifacts have fitting display case at the farm.
7. Meet with holistic, regenerative farming advocates and practitioners and begin dialogue about re-introduction of grazing, native plants, and mixed use farming.
8. Peter told us Fresh Run is actually mostly wild habitat. What kind? Where does it connect with Star Route's wooded area, wildlife corridor?
9. Poetry beyond Kyger, how did she bring other poets into the town? How did Bolinas become such a hot-spot for creative writing?
10. The Matriarchal theme of women owning/managing agricultural land in Bolinas.

Sadja Greenwood, leader in health, moves to Oregon

Pt Reyes Light, 6/7/2018

By Anna Guth

Longtime Bolinas resident Sadja Greenwood, whose articles on health and medicine have appeared in local publications for years, moved to Portland last month, though she will continue publishing on her blog.

Her writings, which appeared nearly monthly in the Light for the last several years, digest the latest medical studies for lay readers on everything from the potential benefits of chocolate and the effects of breathing on healthy brain function to the dangers of certain chemicals in common plastics.

The death of her partner, Alan Margolis, last summer and an invitation from her son, who lives in Portland, spurred her decision to move north, Dr. Greenwood said. "It's difficult to leave—I'll miss my friends, my band, the beauty and quiet," she said last week from her new apartment, where she was still waiting for her belongings to arrive.

Dr. Greenwood said playing in the American and Celtic roots band, Midnight on the Water, which held its last performance of 20 years at Smiley's Schooner Saloon a few weeks ago, contributed to her good health. (She plays flute and penny whistle.) So does a healthy diet—she doesn't drink alcohol or eat white flour or sugar—along with regular pilates and meditation.

She also noted the benefits of learning how to listen. Soon after she and Mr. Margolis moved to Bolinas in 1980, they found themselves entangled in a civil dispute with a neighbor, and participated in a private mediation program.

Drawn to the nature of the work instantly, they both became mediators, helping to resolve issues locally between neighbors, landlords and tenants, and partners. "I learned how to listen," Ms. Greenwood explained. "I learned how to do what is called 'effective listening,' which is really listening to another person and repeating back to them the gist of what they said and asking, 'Did I get it right?' And then how to say something that indicates that you aren't blaming them, or using language that would be insulting."

She added, "It is transformative to be trained in this—you look back in your early life with parents and friends and see how you could have done things differently."

Dr. Greenwood and Dr. Margolis were both doctors who met at the University of California, San Francisco. After purchasing their home on the Big Mesa in 1980, they settled there full-time in the late '90s.

Dr. Greenwood was an assistant clinical professor in the Department of Obstetrics, Gynecology, and Reproductive Sciences at the University of California Medical School in San Francisco. She also worked at Planned Parenthood in San Francisco, where she started one of the country's first teen clinics in 1968 and, soon after, an abortion clinic.

Together, she and Dr. Margolis created an educational film on safe abortion techniques in 1973. She is also the author of "Menopause, Naturally," and a novel, "Changing the Rules."

The novel, which draws in part from her own past, features the journey of a young medical student from the East Coast and themes of abortion rights, feminism and romance.

Dr. Greenwood said she is excited to get settled in Portland, connecting with the friends she has there, playing music with her son and finding a new pilates teacher.

Sadja Greenwood's articles can be found at sadjascolumns.blogspot.com.
