THREE GREAT THINGS ABOUT THIS PLACE...

- Getting a wonderful, quiet new refrigerator after three weeks with a failing one. (At least it was great until the delivery truck tore out our phone line. AT&T did well getting us back on line the next day.)
- The Perseid meteor shower. Just knowing that it's happening, up there beyond the fire haze.
- Next-door Bolinas: what a powerful communications tool! I had a huge response to my complaint about the missing Sunday New York Times crossword.

Legumes Reduce Blood Sugar Levels: Researchers at the University of Guelph (Ontario, Canada) have found that adding legumes to your diet can significantly reduce blood sugar levels. They experimented with swapping out half a portion of white rice or white potatoes with green or red lentils. Replacing the half portion of rice with lentils reduced blood glucose levels by 20%. Replacing a half portion of potatoes with lentils reduced blood glucose levels by 35%, compared to the levels found when lentils were not used. Details of the study were recently published in the Journal of Nutrition. Lentils can slow digestion and slow the release of glucose into the bloodstream from the starch of white rice or potatoes. Other legumes with similar properties include beans of all kinds, garbanzo beans, soy beans and peas. These legumes are nitrogen-fixing, thereby improving soil fertility.

A Diet to Ward off Breast Cancer: Results from the Nurses Health Study have indicated that women who had five and a half servings of fruits and vegetables daily, compared to those who had less than two and a half servings, had an 11 percent lower breast cancer risk. A serving is about one cup. The effect was especially significant with the most aggressive types of breast cancer. Cruciferous vegetables (broccoli, cauliflower, Brussels sprouts, kale, and cabbage) were especially strongly associated with reduced risk, as were yellow and orange vegetables such as carrots, winter squash, yams and sweet potatoes. This study has recently been published in the International Journal of Cancer.

A study entitled :Killing me Softly...electronic communications monitoring and employee and spouse well-being has shown that when employers expect workers to monitor their work related emails during non-work hours, the result is a problem for the employees and their families. William Becker, a Virginia Tech associate professor of management in the Pamplin College of Business, wrote that "The competing demands of work and nonwork lives present a dilemma for employees, which triggers feelings of anxiety and endangers work and personal lives." Their study shows that employees do not need to spend actual time on work in their off-hours to experience the harmful effects. The mere expectations of availability increase strain for employees and their significant others -- even when employees do not engage in actual work during nonwork time. "The insidious impact of 'always on' organizational culture is often unaccounted for or disguised as a benefit -- increased convenience, for example, or higher autonomy and control over work-life boundaries," Becker said. "Our research exposes the reality: 'flexible work boundaries' often turn into 'work without boundaries,' compromising an employee's and their family's health and well-being." Prospective employees should be told clearly whether or not email availability in off-hours is expected, so they can decide on the suitability of the job. Employers should establish boundaries on when they expect off-hour work to be done, and how it will be compensated.

There are several take-home messages from this paper that apply to all of us. The digital world of screens and phones has taken over most of our lives, even when work demands are not the issue. It is wonderful and amazing to have the knowledge of the world, past and present, in your pocket. However, making time for talking face to face, reading a book, doing art and playing music are still important ways of being human. Gardening, walking, hiking and running outdoors, playing sports and watching the sky -- name your favorite and leave your screen behind for a while. But -- you might want to turn it on to listen to -- Killing me Softly with his Song -- from the 1970's! It's haunting.

WHAT HAPPENED

8-13-18 Monday Morning Recap

Week-in-Review from Jennie Pfeiffer Riley

In the emotional heat of wildfires decimating the Northwest, political fires in Washington and elsewhere across the country, hot fires of passionate response to the removing children from their families at our border towns, and the sometimes fiery local controversy regarding affordable long term housing vs. vacation rentals, and on-and-on, I decided this week to work to cool down a bit, find my lost sense of humor, and join Evan Kahn's "smile and wave" movement. Evan wrote a small request in Next Door a while ago asking that people take a little time to smile and wave when passing others on the street. I like the idea, so I have been working on it and I have to say it feels good. You might want to give it a try.

The BIG news of the week was a notice that the hardware store is going on the market. That hit me hard. That enterprise has certainly gone through some turnovers and changes over the years since I arrived here in 1980, some tumultuous, some sad, some happy, and I have been loving the Dibblee tenure. Here's my response to their Next Door posting: "Sooo, so sad to get this news! Change is always difficult to hear about, but in this case, Yikes! It's tough! I didn't think I could handle Terry not being there at the store anymore, but you (Dibblee's) were so kind, gracious, and generous in helping, not only Terry, but the Community get through that transition, that we were able to move toward a start at recovery. But now another change to endure! I'm happy for you that you two will have more time, and I appreciate your putting it out there for us to respond to before it goes to the larger world, but it is difficult to consider not seeing your friendly, smiling faces to help with our transactions. Your choices of items to stock, is exemplary, always something interesting and perfect for gift shopping, and the hardware shelves stay well stocked. Thank you for your years of service and your kind, caring business style. It will be difficult to adjust, but adjust we must. " It's one of those glad/sad news items, and I wish them well. Maybe a community collective?

Other community news of the week was a change-over in management of the Commonweal Community Garden. Anna O'Malley, Bolinas Clinic physician, is the new director of that non-profit. I stopped in on Saturday's open house to give her a welcome and see what would be happening there. I am happy for her to be able to move forward with her vision of melding health, harvest, & harmony for greater human vitality. Looks like a continuation of the workshops on the ecology of health in the garden. I wish her the best.

Otherwise, the week was about the plethora of pelicans and gulls at the beach and in the lagoon. Breathtakingly beautiful! So very many, too many to count, maybe thousands Wednesday, circling and diving and fishing, so many in the water that there was no room for surfers to share the waves. Grandchild Simone and I took a picnic lunch to the beach on Thursday and were amazed, watching the dance of the pelicans.

There are now four candidates signed on to run for three, School Board seats, so it's officially a race. I'm looking forward to hearing what people have to say. jp

P.S. For those following the saga of our dying refrigerator - sometimes working, sometimes not, sometimes only the freezer, etc., - we're so happy with our new fridge this week, and happy to have the repair of the phone/DSL lines that were snagged and busted with the truck delivery and removal, as they smiled and waved backing out.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The PEACH farm kindly sold me a few flats of sweet, juicy ORGANIC Faye Elberta's; the only harvest this season. Higher cost, (2.50 each=$5.00 a pound) will help recover some of their losses due to serious weather changes, this past winter. The farm is throwing in the towel, so these are the last ever of the BEST PEACHES we have all come to enjoy, these past 11 years. Look for me, mid-morning, Tuesday, downtown. flower sierra in Bolinas, somewhere between Hawk's place, the Farmstand, and downtown (People's Store and Bolinas Market). It has sentimental value, since it was her Dad's. It's a white-faced, silver watch with a black crocodile-like band.

LOST AND FOUND

MY WIFE WENDY LOST A WATCH TODAY (SUNDAY)

Contact would be Wendy Jaffe at 415-250-1771
