Kendra McKinley & Project AMPLIFI

Kendra McKinley just returned from a whirlwind three-day artistic collaboration in Iceland. Today, she'll be heading to Smiley's Saloon in Bolinas to spend the week writing, refining, and performing her new album.

Kendra's voice is prismatic: hold it up to the light one way and you get honeyed seduction; another, raw power; still another, a freshwater stream. Her songs are sassy, classy, and jazzy. Whether she's creating a full choir using just her voice and a looping pedal, or backed by her dynamic funk band, her infectious music will leave you entranced.

Kendra will be in Bolinas for a Project AMPLIFI Musician's retreat, designed to support the sonic and social work of brilliant, conscientious, engaged artists. While in Iceland, she was arranging songs for Ragnar Kjartansson's upcoming three day musical experience, Romantic Songs of the Patriarchy, at the Women's Building in San Francisco (sold out), which explores how famous, innocuous-seeming songs actually have complex attitudes towards women.

Kendra is an active advocate for social justice, feeling great responsibility to serve as a role model for young people, especially girls. She knows that songwriting is a powerful tool for processing thoughts and emotions, and she has taught many people, young and old, how to transform their life experiences into music as a form of empowerment. She has performed in benefit concerts for Planned Parenthood, Bay Area Women and Children's Center, as well as performed concerts for the special needs campers at Camp Krem (Santa Cruz, CA).

While at Smiley's she and her band and other collaborators will be developing the new album through a fluid, Steely Dan-esque approach by inviting fellow musicians to attend demoing sessions, where they are encouraged to vocalize or even track their ideas on a given song. Kendra explained that the philosophy behind this album cycle is to treat album production like a semi-permeable membrane: welcoming new ideas from a broad cast of musicians friends, whilst still being selective about what makes it onto a given track. Oftentimes records are created in total isolation, only being released once they are polished and packaged for consumption. She wants to abandon the preciousness and privacy that characterized how she made the last album, TREAT; by enjoying the process, celebrating people and innovative music-makers.

While in Bolinas, Kendra will continue to write songs, the band will continue to explore production ideas, the ladies will work on their dazzling choreography, and we'll showcase our works on the Smiley's stage Thursday, Friday, and Saturday night.

The Whitecaps at Thursday's luncheon

Buttermilk-soaked Virginian-fried Chicken Wings

by StuArt

Last Thursday was the monthly Whitecaps Luncheon at the Rod & Boat Club. It was also my birthday. In celebration of my 70th birthday I offered to cook my famous buttermilk-soaked "Virginia fried" chicken wings for the Whitecaps.

Advertising it as "Virginia fried" always makes me laugh because actually the chicken is baked in the oven. But I can attest to its authenticity because I'm a Virginian, born and raised in Virginia. Maybe I'll call it "Virginian fried" chicken wings.

Anyway - back to the Whitecaps luncheon. In preparation I bought a couple of big packages of chicken wings, a dozen to a package. They were fresh chicken wings, big and meaty, and I figured soaking them in buttermilk would plump them up even more, and normally about 20-25 seniors attended a Whitecaps luncheon. Plenty of chicken I thought.

The day of the luncheon, Thursday, my birthday, was beautiful, warm and sunny with little wind, a perfect day for dining on the lagoon. As I pushed the pram full of chicken wings towards the Rod & Boat Club, townspeople called out to me, "See you at the Whitecaps."

As each person called out their rsvp I made a mental inventory of people vs. amount of chicken. I realized I had a problem. When I arrived the Rod and Boat Club was throbbing with close to 50 people, twice as many as expected. I wheeled the pram full of chicken wings into the kitchen of the Road & Boat Club, and called over my friend Magi.

"Magi" I confessed, "I cooked only 24 chicken wings and there are twice that many Whitecaps."

"Cut them in half," Magi said. "Here give me a knife I'll help you."

Magi and I clandestinely cut all the chicken wings in half. The platter full of chicken wings looked like the raccoons might have gotten to it. Still there was a multitude of wings.

And behold! there was also a multitude of side dishes and salads that people had brought for the potluck. Three tables filled with healthy food stretched along one wall of the Rod & Boat Club.

And at the head of the table was the platter of chicken wings, enough for everyone, including the two vegetarians.

Verily, it was a replay of the miracle of loaves and fishes. Everyone fed. A joyful feast.

A wonderful, miraculous birthday. Thank you.

OLLI: Fall 2018 Classes 10/05/2018 - 1:30pm to 3:15pm

As events on a scale not encountered since Richard Nixon's downfall unfold in today's Washington, what could be more insightful in these fraught times than to take a good, up-close look at how the Supreme Court works, especially in the context of how the justices handled the landmark decisions of the "Warren Court" era?

In this course, Bill O'Connor, JD will focus on the landmark Supreme Court decisions from the "Warren Court" e.g.: cases on abortion, school prayer, freedom of the press, and the right to counsel, using recordings of actual oral arguments. He will also cover the inner procedures of the Supreme Court, how cases move to final opinions.
