The grasses are light brown and ocean comes in long shimmering lines
 under the fleet from last night which dozes now in the early morning

Here and there horses graze on somebody's acreage

Strangely, it was not my desire that bade me speak in church to be released but memory of the way it used to be in careless and exotic play

when characters were promises then recognitions. The world of transformation is real and not real but trusting.

Enough of these lessons? I mean didactic phrases to take you in and out of love's mysterious bonds?

Well I myself am not myself.
 and which power of survival I speak for is not made of houses.

It is inner luxury, of golden figures that breathe like mountains do and whose skin is made dusky by stars.

!!!NO BLOOD, PLENTY OF SWEAT, NO TEARS!!!

I am very proud to report that there was a great volunteer turnout for the two day cleanup at the BCLT's 430 Aspen Project. Many of us Over 60's joined forces with many Under 12's to clear brush and unnecessary out buildings on the property in anticipation of future equitable rentals. I would like to encourage everyone to mark October 7th on their calendars for the the 430 Aspen Open House and Benefit.

This is what our town does best.

We gather for a righteous cause and get the work done.

Gather. Explore. Play!

First Youth Group of the 2018-2019 school year! A tiny but mighty posse unloaded from the school bus into the September sun. Kestrel, Mariam, Logan and Anwyn ran excitedly to the blustery beach with cones of donated soft serve and a bag of deliciously fresh fries. We found a nook to settle in and made the rounds expressing what we were grateful for. Coming together, sharing food, and thanks for the people that make Youth Group possible were voiced. Anwyn set up cool hurdles out of driftwood and we practiced leaping over them and rejoiced under the blanket of flying seagulls overhead. Retreating into the library for reading and computer games, the group was also oriented to Kerry's new craft project that uses and highlights art from community members who have passed on, but who were generous benefactors to the library, youth group, and Bolinas-Stinson community. We are excited to co-create these and offer them for fundraising at this coming seasons Winter Fair! On our way to dinner, we procured the Wes Anderson film "Isle of Dogs" from the New Release section of the library. With our stack of savory pies from The Parkside we strolled down to The Den. Unfortunately, the key had been moved so as we postponed our use of the basement, and munched on slices on the church steps, the girls decided to explore the playground and the creek. Seconds later Mariam and Kestrel come running, a swarm of wasps had attacked them after they accidentally stepped on a nest! There were still some trapped in their clothes! It was horrible. Kestrel got bit over 15 times and Mariam several times on her face! Luckily we had a bunch of portable ice packs and quickly broke them up so they could apply to their stings. Incredibly grateful neither one of them were allergic to the venom! Anwyn opted not to run when she saw the swarm but walk slowly in the other direction. Turns out her instincts were spot on. It is recommended if you accidentally disturb a yellow jacket nest to not run and flail your arms as it only aggravates the swarm. One should cover your face with your hands and slowly walk away. It is recommended if you do end up running, go in a direct line toward heavy vegetation and try to keep your arms quiet. Similar to being held down in heavy surf, don't freak out, try to stay calm! A true test of overcoming instincts to not worry and flail especially if getting stung multiple times! Everyone maintained a good attitude, we retreated into the car and put hydrocortisone on the stings and opened even more ice packs. One of the few times cursing went unpunished as these lucky folks tended to their bites we made our way around the lagoon vowing to have a smoother Monday afternoon next week.

In Search of a Small Coastal Town In Northern California

Having read two articles in recent over the hill publications, inspiration to write the following article was reborn. It is also inspired by recent local events and other various articles written over the past few years.

It would seem that journalists enjoy writing that this small coastal town used to be hidden, unknown, and impenetrable, with the sign taken down and unfriendly locals to "outsiders", but now with the event of googlemaps, gps, and online surf info, the town has been found...

Yet the fact remains that this town has not been found. Yes, you can rent an air b'n'b, frequent a surf shop, eat at a restaurant, hike in the weekend parade to a waterfall, or go "surf", but that in no way means you have found anything but a fleeting pleasurable experience with too many others. It is like the difference between attending a petting zoo and living on a farm...

The very nature of this town and place is to be unknown. A study in tradition and evolution, self respect and respect for others...This town is a weaving of community in the truest sense, comprised of a vast array of human and natural elements, dancing playing working and living rooted in a few foundational concepts with branches of infinite expressions of a variety of similar and differing themes, like life well lived... If one does not know what these are, one knows not.

So the next time you consult your gps, ask yourself, "Where am I?", and begin your search of self, for the journey is the thing and the destination does not exist...

Eating blueberries and hugging bears is a good start...

"SOCCER KELLY" ONORATO & FAMILY NEED OUR HELP!

As many of you know, Kelly (our beloved "Soccer Kelly") severely injured her knee several months ago and is having orthopedic surgery this week. She has a "bucket-handle" tear that needs attention so that she can get back onto the fields – both for work and coaching the kids. Her insurance deductible is about the cost of the entire surgery – $10,000. The government has denied her the assistance we all thought she would receive, as she is more than deserving. Any and all financial gifts would be greatly appreciated! Donations may be made on Kelly's GoFundMe.com account ("Knee Surgery for Soccer Kelly"), or via PayPal using her email address: kellyboys@yahoo.com. Checks may be sent to Kelly Onorato, PO Box 666, Bolinas, CA 94924-0666.

Thank you SO much!

Cheryl & Damiano (and the Town)

Dear Bolinas,

It's me, Nicole, your sometimes-Wednesday printer. In addition to printing your Hearsay, I host a monthly lecture series at an appropriation workshop / radical library in San Francisco.

It's called PLACE TALKS, and it's visual lectures about location, and it's at the Prelinger Library in the South of Market neighborhood. We're kicking off the fifth season this week, and I want to invite you, as one of the talks is of particular interest to the Hearsay readership.

Tanya Zimbaro, a curator of media arts at SFMOMA, will present "Tribal Vision: West Coast Video Vanning." Her talk focuses on filmmaker Loren Sears and his work during a time when he was based in Bolinas. She will tell the story of how portable video cameras intersected with social movements in California in the early 1970's. He outfitted a van with video recording, editing, and playback equipment and toured the Pacific Coast as the Tribal Vision Network, to "record lifestyle innovation happening in these communities, edit and feed it back as a way of providing a connection and clarify what was being accomplished — a kind of self-critical tool for cultural innovators."

The lecture is free and open to the public. It is the second talk of the evening, following Dorothy Santos presenting a talk on format wars and independently owned video rental stores in "Captain Video: The Last of the Small Screen Heroes."

The talks begin promptly at 7, are each about 30 minutes long, and the library opens at 5pm for browsing. It's a great collection!

How do we stop these irritating calls? Register your number on the federal Do Not Call list by visiting its website or calling 1.888.382.1222 from your landline. That should help weed out legitimate solicitors. To avoid a good percentage of illegal calls, try Nomorobo, a service that blocks telemarketers and robocalls free of charge for digital landlines, such as Comcast or AT&T wireless. (Unfortunately, it won't work with the traditional AT&T service that I use.) For the scammers that make it through—and they will—the FTC advises us not to answer.

Volunteers Needed Oct. 6th!! Please Help!

Pt. Reyes National Seashore -- Dinner on the Pacific Plate

Hello Friends and Neighbors,

We are so fortunate to be living in this beautiful part of the world. One of the organizations that is working hard to preserve biodiversity and educate future generations on protecting these wild lands is the Point Reyes National Seashore. Please consider being a volunteer for their biggest fundraiser of the year!

Why Volunteer? As a Dinner on the Pacific Plate volunteer you help your local National Park to reach their fundraising goals which allows them to support habitat and trail restoration, wildlife and endangered species protection, other volunteer programs, environmental education programs for people of all ages, and scholarships that allow over 1,750 children connect to and understand the natural world.

Currently, there is one more shift that needs to be filled on October 6th - Shift #3: Dinner Service.

Shift 3: Dinner Service - 4:00pm to 9:30pm (Volunteers ages 21 and up are welcome!)

Volunteers will assist professional servers with a family-style dinner. Tasks include serving large platters of food, pouring wine and filling water, bussing tables, assisting guests and other duties as assigned.

*A volunteer dinner and a special edition long-sleeved t-shirt will be provided. Accommodations available.

If you are able to help us out on Saturday, October 6th, please contact Heather Clapp at clappheather@gmail.com. Thank you in advance for your consideration.

College of Marin's 'Field Lab of Dreams' in Bolinas moves ahead

By KERI BRENNER | Marin Independent Journal

After many months of debate, public outreach and study, College of Marin's board of trustees took the first step this week toward potentially restoring the shuttered Bolinas Marine Lab to a usable and much-coveted science teaching and field research space at 72 Wharf Road along the Bolinas Lagoon in West Marin.

Trustees, meeting Tuesday at COM's Indian Valley Campus in Novato, voted 6-0 — with one board member absent — to spend $70,000 to hire Perkins Eastman Dougherty Architects D.P.C. to develop a proposal for a possible rehabilitation project at the site, which was shut down in 2006 amid concerns about structural deterioration, mold, earthquakes and other problems.

The proposal, to be completed by mid-January in coordination with COM architectural design staff and an advisory committee of college trustees and faculty members, will then be submitted to the Marin County planning department staff for review. The Perkins Eastman firm has extensive experience working with educational institutions and in dealing with government entities, including the California Coastal Commission, said COM president David Wain Coon.

"I firmly believe this is our best path forward at this time," Coon said. "The board is in concurrence on that."

Coon said the $70,000 will come from Measure B bond funds approved by voters. There had been some debate earlier about whether bond funds could be used for the project, but that question was resolved earlier this year, Coon said.

"A light came on for me in the spring," he said. "I realized that the best path forward was to move past the concept stage and to put together an actual proposal. Until we put together a project, we won't know if it will fly."

COM professor Joe Mueller, a lead instructor in the school's marine biology program, said he was pleased to see the project finally move ahead. "First and foremost, the faculty is thrilled that we have moved beyond the discussion phase to an action phase," Mueller said in an email. "All along, the faculty has just wanted to see the field station reopened for the benefit of the students."

The fate of the field lab has been bandied about for years, even as the facility itself languished from neglect. Mueller, at a packed public meeting in Bolinas in October 2017, spoke out passionately in favor of preserving the site as a college resource, rejecting rumors that the college should unload the problem-plagued station and donate it to the town of Bolinas or a local nonprofit for a community center.

Mueller's comments touched a nerve and led to faculty uprising of sorts. In December 2017, faculty members joined in a coalition with members of the public and published a 96-page position paper, "The Field Lab of Dreams...Build it and They Will Continue to Come." The position paper has since been amended several times to include reports from college science alumni and other opinions supporting the restoration.

"We believe that between Measure B funds and the recent revelation that a quarter of a million dollars given by a private donor some years ago (and) earmarked for the Bolinas Field Station is on the college's books, money is not an issue," Mueller said. "We also feel that there are no legal and liability hurdles and that safety issues will be accounted for and mitigated through the permitting process with the county."

Julie Hanft, a community volunteer working with the faculty, confirmed Mueller's comments in her address to the trustees Tuesday. "We believe that all of the board's liability and safety concerns will be flushed out and addressed within the Marin County planning process," Hanft told the COM board. "As a result, the Division of State Architect will not be required to approve the project because the two processes are redundant. This will also allow the college to recognize a cost savings, since working with (the state) is more expensive than working with the county." As to other relevant laws that had been a question mark before — such as the Field Act regulating construction on an earthquake fault line — Hanft said the county planning process would be the "equivalent substitute" from state oversight.

The Bolinas Marine Lab complex, which includes a dock and other buildings, was originally built in 1910 as a U.S. Coast Guard Station. The college acquired it in the 1950s from the federal government, according to the faculty position paper. "Only one other California community college owns a similar facility," the position paper says. "Mendocino College uses its field station, also obtained from the federal government, for a wide range of science classes, art classes and student activities. It also partners with nonprofit scientific entities and rents the facility out to researchers and others to defray costs."
