Paul Kayfetz
Citizen Representative
GGNRA Transportation Study
Board of Control
Box 310, Bolinas, Ca. 94924

Dear Paul,

It occurs to me that your friends on the Board might like to consider Palamarin as one of the last places in the United States where you can actually walk from a town directly into the wilderness. If the object of better transit service in the GGNRA is to allow people to see things as they are preserved in nature, wouldn't it be nice if people could know what it was like "back then" in 1974, when townsfolk and visitors could ride horses, pedal bicycles, or walk in comfort down beautiful and little-travelled Mesa Road.

Convenient motor access to the Seashore has already been developed in Bear Valley and points north. The road is already smooth and easy, and it's just a hop, skip and jump from the information building to the woods. To bring bus service to Palamarin in this fashion would be needless duplication. Needless and large expense would be called for -- to fix the road and build a parking lot and provide the thousands of services that short-term ("for the afternoon") nature lovers require. Those services already abound near Bear Valley, in Olema, Inverness, and Pt. Reyes, and in Stinson Beach to the South.

Golden Gate Transit's daily busses from San Francisco and the five daily runs on weekends now bring many hikers and bird-watchers to Bolinas. They are welcome here, as are all polite and pleasant people. But they, too, will tell you that to run the highway (and would destroy much and preserve nothing.

Let the Palamarin Trailhead remain the Southern Entrance to the Seashore -- but let it also be at least one of the few remaining places in America where the blacktop road stops a short way out of town, and the rest of the way is free.

Sincerely,

Michael Rafferty

INSTRUCTION (tonight at the school)

"Tide Pool Life," a "non-technical introduction to the biology of the sea," will be offered for six Wednesdays, 7:30-9:30 p.m., beginning April 17 at Bolinas School. Instructor for the Tamalpais Union High School adult course is Gene Gerlach of Fairfax. Gerlach said lectures and discussions about "the strange creatures that inhabit this coast" will be followed by two field trips to study tide pools first hand. Fee for the class is $8. Students may register with Gerlach at the first class meeting.

SPORTS - by Roy Buckman

Well fans, another tale of woe. What does a true sports nut do when he knows years in advance that one of the great moments in sports is coming? Prepare, right? Right. That moment being the home run Hank Aaron hit to break Babe Ruth's great record. I've followed Hank's career ever since he broke in as a rookie back in '54, knowing he was a great one. Finally, 2 years ago I realized he was close to THE record. He came close last season with 713 big ones and all winter I waited with bated breath knowing it was merely a matter of time. (To be continued.)

"Echos" a spectacular short movie by Greenough about surfing will be shown along with Project Jonah underwater slides of right whales Thursday night at the Community Center, 8:00 pm. Admission is free.

MISINFORMED SOURCES TOLD THE HEARJAY NEWS THAT TONY'S TRIAL WAS TO HAVE STARTED ON TUESDAY. INSTEAD, THE PRELIMINARY HEARING CONTINUES. SPECTATORS ARE NOT ALLOWED.
